The second most prized possession of John Loftis

Kraft Foods and Color TV have gone together like cheese and crackers since 1954, when Kraft first sponsored TV shows in color.

To see what his company was paying for, John Loftis, Kraft's President, brought home his first Color TV set—complete with 15-inch screen, four controls to adjust color, and a $1000 price tag. Today, Mr. Loftis is still as excited about Color TV as that first day. He prizes his new set second only to his company's fine products.

In its five years, Color TV has made amazing progress. The screen size has gone way up—prices have come way down—tuning has been greatly simplified—and today there are more top color shows in one month than there were in all of 1954. (Mr. Loftis' favorite show? Perry Como. Sponsored by you-know-who.)

You could easily become as firm a fan of Color TV as Mr. Loftis. Thousands have found a half-hour demonstration will do the trick. See for yourself. Your RCA Victor dealer will be glad to show you the wonderful, wonderful difference today's Color TV makes. And today's prices start as low as $495.

5TH ANNIVERSARY OF COLOR TV: A LIFETIME OF PROGRESS IN 5 SHORT YEARS

Service is no problem. See your local dealer, serviceman, or nearest RCA Service Co. office. Nat'l'y advertised prices shown; optional with dealer. UHF optional, extra. Price, specifications subject to change without notice.

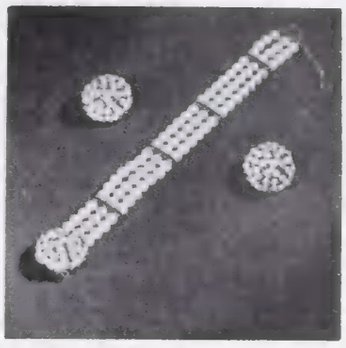
VENETIAN GEESE. Genuine Murano handcrafted glass geese direct from Venice will bring deep, sweet peace to your dining table. They'll be equally lovely on a storage-wall shelf, or on the ledge of a picture window. In jewel tones of pink or seafoam with base and beak lavishly and dazzlingly flecked with gold, about 10″ h., $15.95 the pr. Charm for Sale, Nyack, N.Y.

HANS BRINKER SKATES, for waltzing across hard-packed snow or for swooping down hills like an up-ended toboggan, will make young cheeks glow like red apples, appetites grow like Topsy. Skate "deck" is beechwood. Leather straps adjustable. Single blade is solid Swedish steel. For children from 3 to 8, (specify shoe sz.) $4.98 pr. The Windmill, Box 107, Darien, Conn.

NAMED FOR YOU are coasters with that special flair for gala parties. Fine-quality metal trays finished in silver, 3½″ in diam., are engraved with your monogram or "Have a drink with . . . (your name)." Order now and put them away for Christmas presents. $1 ea.; set of 6, $4.95, tax incl. Lillian Vernon, 3 Tecumseh Ave., Mount Vernon, N.Y.

SOCKS-APPEAL. Long on flattery and warmth, these cable viyella socks fill the bill for back-to-school youngsters. Viyella, imported from England, is 55% wool, 45% cotton and completely washable (on the sock it says "If it shrinks, we replace."). Choose red, navy, oxford, dark green, or white in children's sizes 7-9½. $1.50 a pair. The Talbots, Hingham 1, Mass.

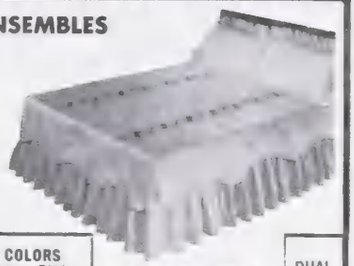
MILKIN' HONEY. The three-legged race of milk-stools has undergone a wonderful transformation. It now comes to you in a kit all ready for you to finish to match your decor. Made of fine Vermont wood, it's fine for television, for sitting pretty at a cocktail party. 16″ high, 15½″ x 8½″ overall, $2.95. Add 45¢ post. J. Haskin Flint, Box 562, Montpelier 12, Vt.



ALADDIN'S LAMP, in miniature, is white ceramic with a pretty floral pattern, brass fittings, and half-frosted tulip chimney. For guest room, kitchen, patio, or emergency use, it burns 4 to 5 hours with each filling of kerosene. Lamp is 7½″ high, 5½″ long, $1.98. Order from Mother Hubbard, Dept. O-131, 10 Melcher St., Boston 10, Mass.

BUNNY HUGS her 'round the head and fluffy bunny fur hugs her hands to keep them warm and pretty. Wait until a freckle-faced Casanova gets a load of Miss Muffet in this set. A red velvet rose nestles in the pure white hat and muff. Padded muff has embroidered satin back, woven wrist cord. Full hat fits all sizes. $2.98 ea., $4.98 the set. Jay Scott, HB-10, Box 152, Flushing 52, N.Y.

PEARL BRACELET. There's nothing quite so flattering as the lovely radiance of pearls, and they lend their own enchantment to anything you wear them with. Here is an exquisite copy of an expensive Oriental pearl bracelet with safety catch and round clasp of mock sapphires and pearls. $6.95. Earrings, $2.50. Tax incl. Montagne's, Verona, N.J.



SOMETHING BLUE adds charm to a kitchen or dining-area wall. And what could be nicer than these lovely 6″ square white ceramic tiles that reproduce the beloved "Blue Willow" and "Onion" patterns. They come with felt backing and hangers and can be used as individual tiles under hot plates, plants, floral arrangements. $2 each. Heinz Store, HB-10, 95 Fifth Ave., New York 3.

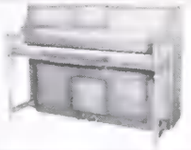
IT'S TWICE THE FUN . . . WHEN YOUR PIANO IS TWO-IN-ONE

THE HARDMAN DUO® PLAYER PIANO



THE AMAZING Duo, both a resonant Console for manual playing and the fun-filled Player Piano charming the lives of thousands of delighted owners. Favorite melodies, the latest hits, whether you can play a lick or not, you can play them like a pro on this newest of pianos.

Entertainment thrives in the home again, as parties for young or old really wind up to the springing bounce of the Duo, daringly compact in design, a true engineering marvel paced to the modern home or apartment. And just watch the faces of your guests as you mysteriously push a hidden button to cut in the saucy tones of the Ukelano, the optional extra, that imparts a mandolin-like tone to the piano. Exclusive too, of course, with the Duo.

For the student in the family, remember that only the Duo offers such tremendous incentive towards self-improvement, letting the child observe the technique of professionally scored arrangements. See the Duo now at your dealer, or write: Dept. HB-10.

These are Fender-Savers, thick rubber molded into a triangle designed to protect fender even from sharp impact. Valuable to any driver with today's broad autos having to enter yesteryear's doorways. Paintable to match door color; attached with nails or mastic. Pair, $5.95; $10.95 for 4. Can create a "stop-here" bumper on garage floor; or on garage wall, protect opened auto doors. Thomas Co., Box 122, New York 36.

A plastic unharmed by sterilization or boiling water forms this new Loma product, a bin-type trash container. Step-on pedal opens it; pedal release causes closure. Bin, 18-quart, lifts out for emptying or cleaning. Won't absorb odors even if used for diapers. An ideal waste-basket replacement in bathroom to keep used facial-tissue hidden. White, yellow, $7.95. Hammacher Schlemmer, New York.

Implements from Holland, beautiful to look at and a joy to use, are created by fine artisans. Skilled craftsmanship and distinctive design make the most of the fine metal used. Every inch is stainless steel, luxurious in quality and weight. Finish looks hand-burnished. Sola Chef-Helper comprises skimmer, vegetable spoon, fork, spatula, 3 ladles, and rack, $16.95. B. Altman & Co., N.Y.C.

This new concept in valet racks is a closet-door attachment. Wood-Rite, who created it, felt general desire for valet-rack convenience is often thwarted by quarters too small for a floor-standing unit. Their answer to the problem makes sense; unites jacket hanger, trouser bar, accessory tray, brass hooks for ties, belts. Ideal for guest rooms. Finely crafted of hardwood, natural or gold, $7.50, Bloomingdale's, New York 22.

One step-saving use for Ronald Household Basket is consolidating needed supplies for a cleaning round; also an easy way to carry vacuum-sweeper's attachments. Three plastic compartments, removable for washing, keep neat, safe order. The basket, handsome and very strong, is natural rattan; size 15″ x 12″ x 5½″. Perfect later on for barbecue supplies. Price is $7.95. Ronald's, 1720 N. Limestone St., Springfield, Ohio.

Kleen-Stik tape, adhesive on two sides, invisibly bonds any two surfaces. Hangs shelf-edging or photo displays; ideal for craft projects, book repairs, clippings. Masking paper covers topside "stickum" as underside is pressed into place; masking then strips off the transparent tape to bare second bonding surface. Adhesion is tight, waterproof. Roll (198 ft.) in dispenser, $3. Kleen-Stik Inc., Chicago 31.

Now and again a better-than-good mop comes along; specifically, the Artmoore. Dense foam-plastic forms mop-head; firm and shaped to pry dirt loose. Used moist as a broom, it even collects animal hair from rugs. In wet use, which includes waxing or rug-shampooing, absorbency is high. Automatic wringing. Two-piece handle; aluminum. With 8″, 10″, 12″ head; $5.95, $6.95, $7.95. Stanley Moore's, Orangeburg, S.C.

Sizes in Cal-Dak's folding laundry-sorter are available with two or three bins. Cross-braces and strong hinges give cart a firm stance and prevent side-sway during movement. Sanforized, sturdy drill forms bins that tie-on; each holds a full washer-load. Labeled at back edge. Brown piping matches bronze-tone finish of the tubular-steel frame. Wheels are swivel type. For $7.95, $9.95. Available at Gimbel's, New York 1, New York.

You attach Explorer paint-mixer or brush-cleaner to a power drill. Real time-savers. Rotor for mixing, created for use with liquid plastics, is non-aerating; also non-splashing. Ideal for photography chemicals. Paint-mixing time per can-ful, about 30 seconds. Brush cleaner's action, in seconds, spins bristles paint-free and dry; $3 for both. Mixer shaft for acids, $1 extra. From Explorer Products, Opa-Locka, Fla.

It is a clothes rod. You merely hang it on existing closet-rod after adjusting size to your need. An easy way to double a closet's hanging facilities or install juvenile-level rod. Arms' length adjusts from 26″ to 21″ to 14″ raising rod-level to keep pace with child's growth. Rod length expands like a telescope from 32″ up to 46″. Hobar Lo-Bar costs $3.50. Strong steel, triple-chromed. From Lemmon's, 816 Madison Ave., New York.

To dry "wash-and-wear" without shoulder distortion and marks that need ironing attention, try Alger inflated hanger. For travel, it affords general service; several can tuck into a shoe. At each end foam latex supplies a clothes brush; also prevents garment, sheer or thick, from slipping off. Easily inflated; locking nipple; $2.95 for 3. Made of tough vinyl. Barnett Co., Box 71, Gadney Station, White Plains, N.Y.

Ge-Halin polishes any metal that exists. All trace of tarnish or discoloration, however heavy the deposit, is cleaned away; final rub-down produces lustrous patina. A tarnish-retardent fortifies the paste formulation. Guaranteed safe for finest sterling or jewelry. Wonderfully effective for mirrors or glass; they really sparkle. In tube, 4-ounce, $1.10; a 2-pound can costs $1.95. From Surrey Ltd., 11 W. 32nd St., New York.

DECORATOR'S DIARY

Notes on new home furnishing that suggest themselves as solutions to problems and enhancers of your home

"Remember the five standard positions in ballet?" asked Laura Morrison, suddenly, in the midst of our discourse concerning eight-year-old Linda's bedroom.

"Sure," I answered, thrusting myself splay-footed into Position Number One. "I'll never be a threat to Dame Margot Fonteyn, but I do know a thing or two about the dance."

"Well, then—I know this sounds like wild extravagance, but do you think we might commission an artist to do a ballet mural for one of the walls?"

We'd been reviewing Linda's command that her room be pink and white with a white tester bed and "lots of lacy ruffles," a predilection I might have foretold. For Linda is all pink and white herself, with a golden pony tail and an iron will—a girl-child after my own heart who made neighborhood history when she was three by refusing to appear in public in blue jeans.

Her present taste inclines to leotards and tutus, for she is undoubtedly the most dedicated and most accomplished pupil in Miss Marsh's ballet class. She had even mentioned that she'd like to have a practice bar installed along one wall.

"A mural is a great idea," I replied, "but no commission will be necessary and no extravagance will be involved—that is, if you agree with me that Denst and Soderlund's screen-printed 'Invitation to the Dance' is about the prettiest wall covering any little girl's room could have."

She agreed, of course, when she saw this touching mural—a ballet line of doe-eyed moppets rehearsing the five standard positions. On the spot, in Karl Mann's showroom, we ordered it up in a gentle lavender-tinted pink—four 12-foot high, 27-inch wide panels that cover nine feet of wall, plus a matching solid color to finish off the other walls. (It's sold also in sets of two panels, and in blue, yellow, and gray-and-white.) We might have had this in paper, but hard-headed foresight indicated that a canvas-backed tough surface of built-up paint would stand the gaff better. We've used it like a dado above the practice bar, which is a thick and shiny brass curtain rod, really an heirloom from Linda's great-grandma's Victorian house, securely bolted into the wall.

"Invitation to the Dance"

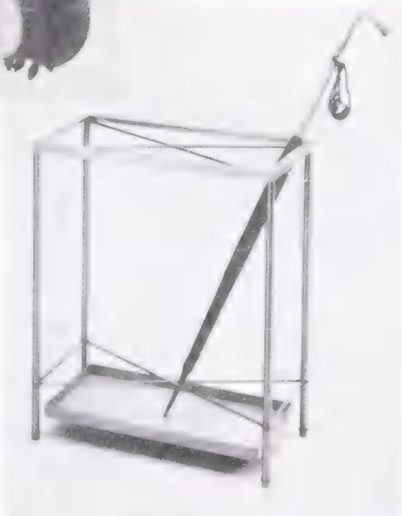
With white rugs on a gray vinyl floor and yards of nylon bridal veiling pouffed and skirted around the bed and its canopy, when the room got "pulled together" it was enough to make Linda—and me—execute a few entrechats and arabesques in sheer delight.

Dorothy Marshall, party-giver extraordinary and a lady addicted to what she calls elegant modern, called me urgently the morning after the house-warming of her new one-room apartment. Sadly enough, the rains had come just before the appointed hour and the guests showed up in full rainy-day attire—capes, umbrellas, rubbers, and those universal plastic babushkas.

"You can imagine how elegant that looked, a parade of dripping umbrellas and raincoats right across my gorgeous white living room into my tidy bathroom. There was no other place for them to leave their wet things. What I need now is a hatrack right at the front door."



Naturally, I should have thought of that earlier, knowing Dorothy's pride and prissiness about that impeccable white damask sofa, the white Moroccan rug, those brass-legged white glass tables, that white flocked wallpaper. Besides, rain or no rain, every house should have an appointed parking spot for a guest's hat and coat. It's only hospitable. But in tiny quarters like Dorothy's the coat closet usually has to go for personal wardrobe and there's not much wall space for a rack or stand in a pint-size foyer.

That's not the only problem, either. When you open the door, you're practically in the living room, so any hat-hanging, umbrella-minding equipment has to look as if it's part of the whole decoration.

Something brass seemed to be indicated, to carry out the gold and white in the room, so I explored every brass hook, every brass bucket and umbrella stand in town. But it was only by chance on a visit to Nessen Studios to look at some lamps that the perfect solution hove into view on Nessen's own wall—a simple V-shape brass strip punctuated by three slender white plastic hanging knobs. It's 13″ wide, 10″ deep, and the knobs project just far enough to hold a hat or coat hanger safely. I was overjoyed, for three of these would furnish nine parking spots and make a clean and pretty pattern against Dorothy's white wall. And then, as if I had ordered it up custom-made, I spotted the umbrella stand—a simple rectangular framing of brass with a criss-cross of brass to hold umbrellas neatly, and white enamel steel drip pan. It's 23″ high, 19″ wide, and, glory be, just 9″ deep—bound to fit slenderly against the wall without getting in the way. And—wouldn't you know it—they were both designed by Beverly Pick, a Londoner, who obviously knows from first-hand experience the kind of care an umbrella needs. These come in a chrome finish, too, for the silvery-minded.

"I don't know how they teach the kids geography these days," said Gary Worth's father brusquely. "All I know is that they're not getting through to Gary. He's nearly 10 and he thinks California is in the state of Los Angeles."

I rarely have any truck with fathers, except to cash their checks when a job is done, but Colonel Worth was obviously delivering this interesting message for a reason.

"Are you telling me you want him to have a map in his room?" I asked.

"Darned right I am—a whole wall full of the U. S. A., if possible, and make it Project Number One before you and his mother go off looking for frills and fringes."

"Roger Wilco!" I replied and sat down to brood over this command for a while. Now everybody knows you can buy paper maps to pin on a wall or paste on a wall or to have mounted and hang on a wall. But something about the way Gary moves seemed to tell me that any material as fragile as paper would have a short life expectancy in the sanctum of our young hero.

I also had the uneasy intuition that the Colonel had not conveyed his wishes to his lady. For she had indicated to me that she visualized her son and heir in a manly setting of wood-green walls, hunting prints and red leather—something she'd seen in an old movie, no doubt, and certainly nothing that could take the color or character of a wall map of the U. S. A.

I foresaw trouble, and just because I left the studio and sped to my travel agent's office doesn't mean I was planning to run away. It turned out to be a smart move, because there, covering a good five feet of wall was just what I needed—a map of the United States in bold relief—hills, dales and mountains in wonderful dimension, place names, thousands of them, clearly marked, and to cap it all off, it was molded in vinyl plastic! And its colors—terra cotta mountains, melon-color plains, and dark green lowlands, all against clear blue oceans—suggested a good working color scheme to appease Mrs. Worth.

The map is self-framed of the same vinyl plastic and actually measures 64″ x 40″, a good important size, decoratively speaking, to hang on the dark green wall above a long, low maple bookcase in Gary's room, where he can see it easily, and even move it about. It weighs only four pounds.

I don't know what it has done to his geography marks, but Gary is entranced at the notion that one inch on the map equals fifty miles. And it's a matter of proud boast that his plastic-covered armchair matches the Rocky Mountains, the denim spread on his maple bed matches the plains, and his vinyl floor and curtains match the ocean blue.

The Aero Service Corporation makes this sturdy, scrubbable map and can even give you one with the major U. S. Highways on it, to say nothing of maps of the states, the continents, and the whole wide world.—M. G.

Vinyl covered roll-out racks prevent chipping and breakage. Calgonite is recommended by many other leading dishwasher manufacturers.*

Wright's concept of a hallway went far beyond that of a mere passage. He wanted to make very inch of it count —for both beauty and usefulness—as he did all the spaces in the house. Here, in two different halls in a house designed by Charles Montooth, one of the Taliesen Associated Architects, are two solutions. Above, in the bath and dressing area, hall stores linens and clothing. Right, the louvered doors enclose a bar (photograph was taken from the living room).

Wright's way with a hall: Put it to work

In a house of his own design, Wright lined a hall with bookcases and closets. At the same time, he opened the wall with windows overlooking a court and pool so that even a casual stroll from one room to another would be filled with the beauty of the surrounding scene. The David Wright home.

Changing the widths in this hallway gives it a character completely different from the usual passageway. Designed by Wright for his first prefabricated house, its jogs and turns promise new and interesting spaces beyond. Batten strips on inside walls add to visual length and width of hall. Cabinets along the right wall serve the bedrooms facing them, but they allow a band of windows at eye level. Marshall Erdman and Assoc., builders.

An inside hall is kept bright through the use of light panels overhead and white plastic shoji along one wall. Shoji slide to reveal large storage area. Shutter doors used at the end of the wall to close off the utility area because they allow ventilation. The architect-owner is William Bernoudy.

Announcing the best behaved upholstery around

There seems to be some idea that really good furniture and children don't mix. In a series of superb new upholstery fabrics, Acrilan* explodes the myth. The textures are marvelous—some look wooly and hand loomed, some are soft, some crisp. The facts are heartening to everybody. These fabrics steadfastly resist dirt. They spot clean remarkably. They resist sagging and shrinking out of shape. And they come in hundreds of combinations of good, clear colors that resist fading. When you buy or re-upholster furniture, look for this label in swatch books. It means quality-controlled fabrics.

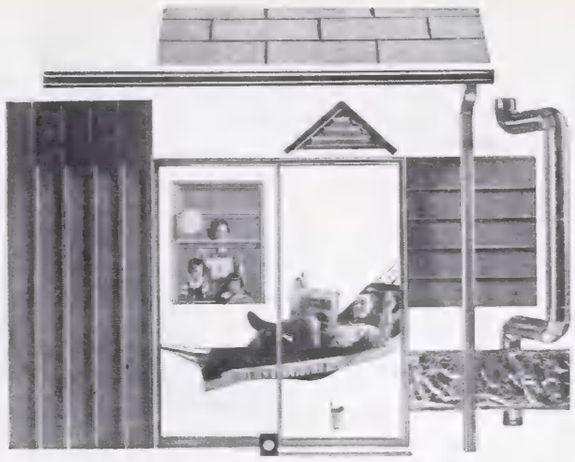
The halls in Wrightian houses are never merely dull, useless passageways



PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Light-transmitting shoji line this hall in the bedroom wing of the house designed by Aaron Green for Mr. and Mrs. Allan Paul. This brightens what could have been a very gloomy hallway. Because the shoji slide back to join the hall with the bedroom at the left, the space becomes doubly useful, and the bedroom occupants have complete access to the storage cabinets lining the opposite side of the hall. Upper shoji panels slide open for good ventilation.

Two extra feet in the entrance hall of this house allowed the development of a useful bookcase-cabinet unit along one side. Sit-down desk was put at the far end of the counter so that someone working there would have a view of greenery outside through the mitred-glass corner window. Home of Allan Paul: Aaron Green was the architect.

Three minutes in this radiant-heat broiler suffices for hamburgers, "franks" or some of each; emerge richly flavored with natural juices, succulently tender. True for chicken, chops, fish. Bacon is made a taste-delight, and fat-free; grilled sandwiches take on gourmet stature. Smoke-free, fume-free operation whatever the food. Drawer dunkable for washing, has "cool zone" for fat drippings. Clock-timer. The portable appliance has in commercial service "made" many an eatery. Size, 14" x 14½" x 9" closed. Clark Vita-Electric costs $129.50.

This Honeywell trio for weather-balanced control of central heating or heating-cooling, links outdoor thermostat to thermostat system for indoor temperature-control. In principle, this tie-up anticipates climatic changes and their effect on personal comfort. In performance, it precisely compensates indoors for any change outdoors in temperature, sun or wind conditions. Three controls, uninstalled, under $50; $100 for clock-type indoors. The three needed controls of type suitable for heating-cooling system under $70.

NEW FORMULA ELECTRASOL® RESTORES DISHWASHERS TO 100% EFFICIENCY

Science Discovers that FOOD PROTEIN FOAM Reduces Dishwasher Action As Much as 90% To Cause Spots, Streaks, Film. New Formula Electrasol Eliminates It.

MAKE THIS SIMPLE EGG FOAM TEST! COMPARE YOUR PRESENT DETERGENT WITH AMAZING NEW FOAM-CONTROL ELECTRASOL

OLD-STYLE DETERGENTS CAN'T CONTROL PROTEIN FOAM

Drop pinch of dishwasher detergent you use now into yolk-soiled egg cup. Fill with hot water. Stir vigorously. Note protein foam that can reduce dishwasher action almost to zero.

NEW FORMULA ELECTRASOL STOPS FOAM FORMATION

Now drop pinch of new Electrasol into equally soiled egg cup. Note freedom from protein foam. This means 100% efficient dishwasher performance. No spots! No streaks! No film!

Foam Control Means Spot-Free Glasses

Economics Laboratory, leader in dishwasher detergent research, has proved what scientists have long suspected; that food proteins (egg yolk, milk, grease, gravy, meat, potatoes, etc.) create foam that slows down washing action almost to zero; that ordinary detergents can't control this foam; that spots, streaks and film result; that new formula Electrasol eliminates foam, restores washing action to 100% efficiency. Result? Spotless glassware! Streak-free dishes! Film-free silver! Get new formula, foam-control Electrasol, America's most economical dishwasher detergent, today! Telescopic expansion fits Minit-Mount bar to fireplace opening; the bar length required is set by self-locking device on adjustment sleeve. Tightening rachet at one wall end with set-screw pinions the installation. To further simplify matters, traverse curtains are factory-attached to their brass canopy; you merely hang the assembly on bar. This model of Minit-Mount fireplace screen, $29.75; slightly more with brass-mesh curtains instead of black ones. The andirons, free-standing, $42.50. Matching fire set includes 4-finger Flextong for logs.

Door automatically unlatches when Bump-It is nudged with an elbow; slightest body-pressure anywhere along bar does the trick. Very simple installation; supplements any screen/storm-type of door, wood or metal. A feature possibly less apparent than convenient, safe exit when you approach with laden arms, is the protection given door's screen or glass areas. Durable structure of anodized aluminum; $5. VIRGIN ISLANDS, U.S.A.

—our three little worlds in the Caribbean

By MARION GOUGH

How to leave home and like it

● For the benefit of those who may be a little hazy about what and where the American Virgin Islands are, they are three tropical isles—St. Thomas, St. Croix, and St. John—75 miles east of Puerto Rico in the Caribbean Sea, about six hours by air from New York, four from Miami. Swept by the trade winds, they have an average temperature of 78° year-round, which makes them, in our book, a credit to Columbus, who discovered them, and a tribute to the good taste of the 16th-century pirates of the Spanish Main who used to pull into the pellucid coves and palm-lined beaches to refresh themselves while they looked over the loot. They were once the fertile "Fabulous Sugar Isles," where 18th-century plantation owners lived in neo-classic magnificence on the profits from sugar, rum, and molasses. They've been peopled by Arawaks, Caribs, Spanish, Africans, English, Dutch, French, Danes, and Americans (we bought them from Denmark in 1917 for $25 million, an unwitting bargain in close-by, tropical vacation country). A built-in bar in the dining room can be an eyesore during dinner, even when it is as tidy and well-organized as the one shown above. In this case, the workman-like cabinets and rows of glasses were concealed by tall folding doors in an off-white color. Their clean lines and woven-leather texture give the whole room a distinctive look, and they can be cleaned with a damp cloth. A handsome piece of hardware for the latch completes the picture. Your Legacy from Frank Lloyd Wright:

A Richer Way of Life

● Last spring, when Frank Lloyd Wright was nearing the completion of his 90th year of life and his 70th year in the practice of architecture, he suddenly died. His office had a great abundance of work, about 20 million dollars worth, for 33 clients. Which is to say that plenty of people understood what he had been telling and showing the world about possibilities for better living through the means of a new architecture.

The death of a great genius causes those who are left behind to stop short and try to assess what has been lost, as well as what has been left behind as the man's heritage to us and to posterity.

The purpose of this issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL is to evaluate what we all have gained from the creative genius as well as the fighting power of this remarkable man. For he was as much a crusading social thinker as he was a designer. And 100 years from now he will undoubtedly loom like a Titan on the 20th-century scene.

This whole issue will try to show what he saw that the rest of us are just beginning to see.

The Essence of Frank Lloyd Wright's Contribution

By ELIZABETH GORDON

● Millions of words have been written about Frank Lloyd Wright, in dozens of languages used wherever books are published. Wright's own books have been translated into 7 other languages.

Yet, despite such an outpouring of words by him and others, he is hard to encompass. The personal character of the man, his 70 years of high creative production, and his many and diverse activities in all phases of life are so beyond ordinary terms of human measurement that most writers and observers have dealt with only a fraction of him. He was always overflowing the boundaries of categories to which critics and commentators had assigned him.

In short, he would not classify. He was too big, too prolific in so many areas to be analyzed and assigned to academic pigeonholes, no matter how numerous the number of pigeonholes.

One reason he could not be classified was because he did not, himself, distinguish between artistic impulse, social motive, and technical soundness. To Wright they were indivisible. He always acted, spoke, and designed out of a total grasp of the situation. (Many men grasp only what is least important in the situation.) He could not look at anything, whether it was a spoon or a city, without seeing it in the biggest possible frame of reference—meaning in the frame of 20th-century technologies and our democratic social goals. He saw the oneness of everything: man in relation to his universe. He saw the whole, but he also saw the parts—all the parts, down to the littlest things, such as why an ordinary sidewalk had cracked.

So to him architecture and a democratic culture were indivisible. Without an environment which would let each individual man grow and develop the greatest potential within him, democracy would be nothing but a hollow political term. Wright considered architecture as a powerful tool for aiding and encouraging man to achieve personal heights never before reached in the history of mankind.

The flowering of mankind was his goal and architecture was his tool. And he used the broadest definition of the word "architecture."

How broad was his meaning of the term is best explained in a letter he recently wrote to a fourteen-year-old boy who had written asking for Mr. Wright's definition of "architect."

Dear Mr. Philip,

My definition of Architect:

arch = chief or highest (i.e. archbishop, archetype = Master)
tect = technique, technology (i.e. the Know-How)
Architect: Master of the Know-How.

Sincerely,

Frank Lloyd Wright

The fusion of nature and human shelter in inseparable harmony

Much of this issue is devoted to the work of architects who studied at Taliesin under Frank Lloyd Wright's direction. The house above, the home and studio of Alden B. Dow, architect, is an eloquent example of the point of view Mr. Wright developed in his students. This house and surrounding land and waterscape seem inevitably and appropriately to belong together, each contributing the utmost to the over-all beauty of the total design. A small stream skirting the building was diverted to create the reflecting pond, endowing the almost level land with another dimension. The concrete block walls of the house extend as retaining walls along water and in garden, even out into the pond as stepping stones, tying structure into the scene. The natural texture of block masonry and pattern of the roof seams give to the building an over-all texture becoming to the natural growth around it. (Please turn the page for more pictures.) planning, farming, cooking, personal dress, behavior—in short: all of life. To him, life was a many-sided, rich proposition. And so was architecture.

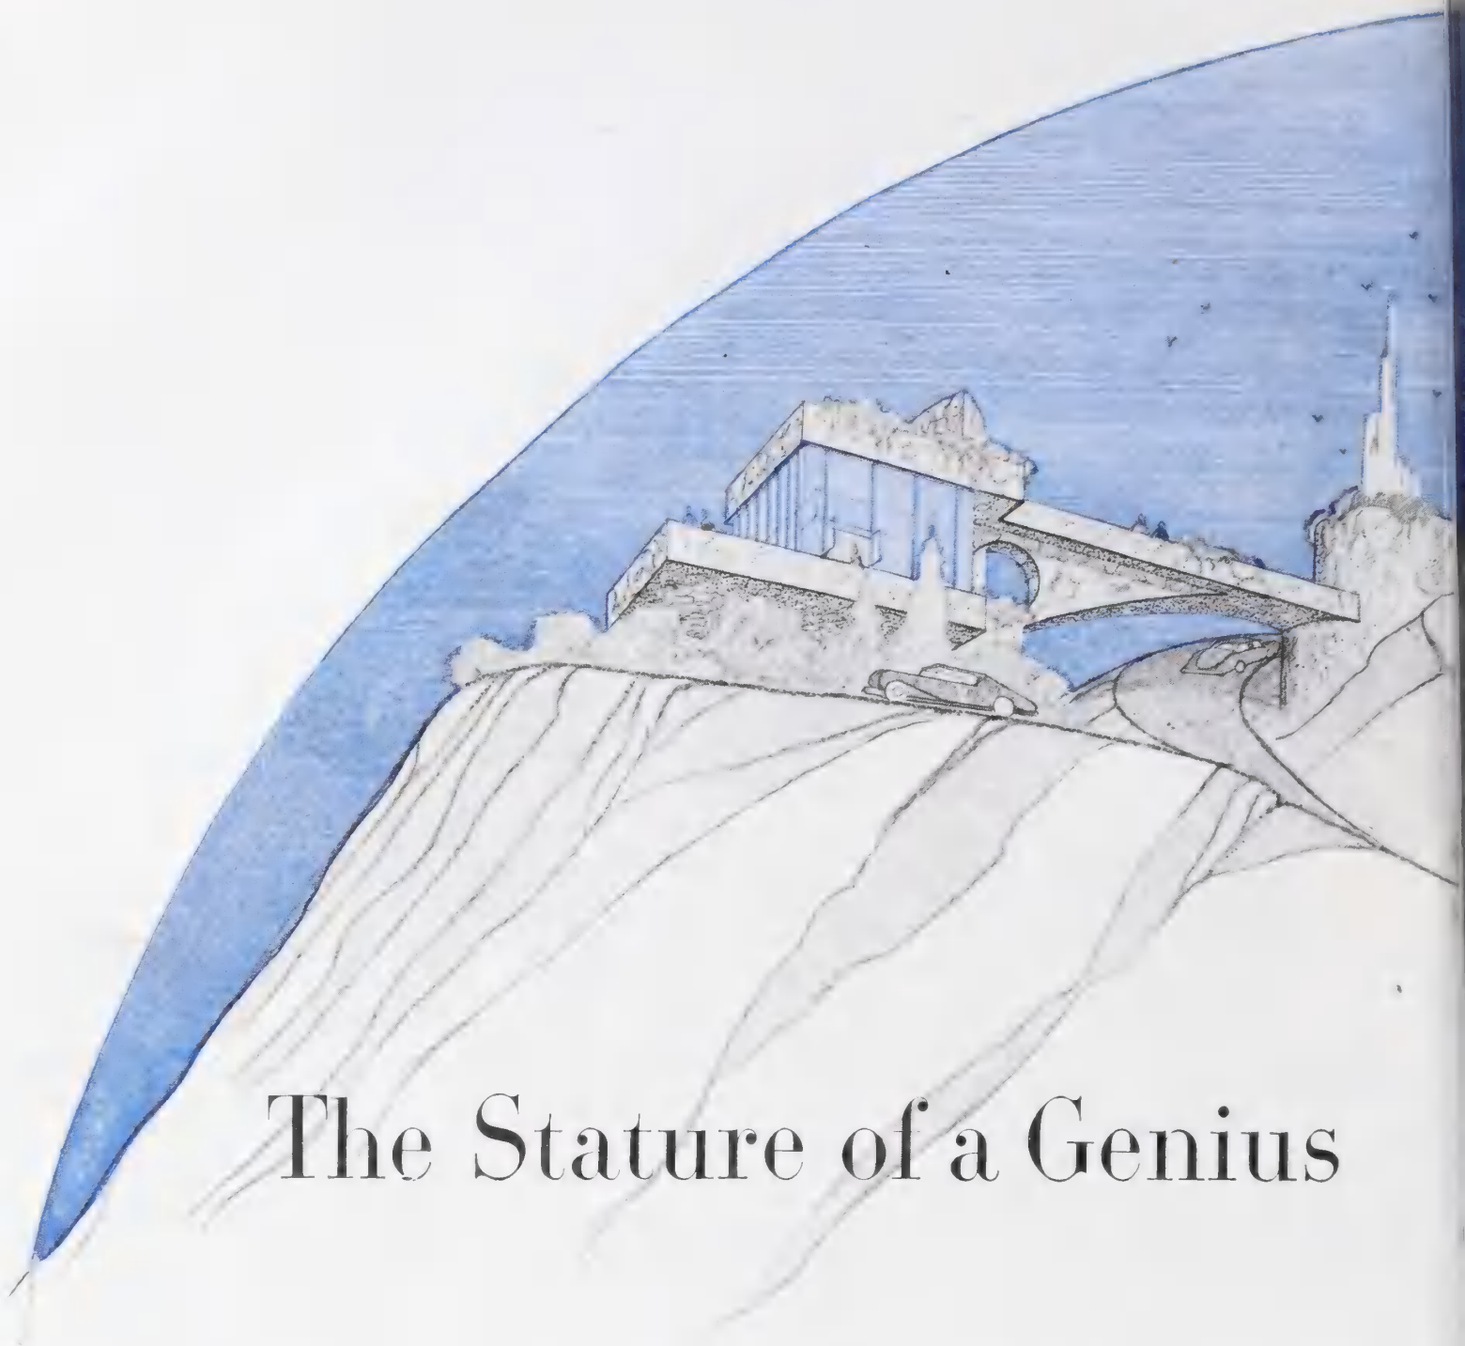
His own life was an example of how rich and many-sided it was possible to make one lifetime. Besides designing 1,000 buildings, he wrote 12 books, gave several thousand lectures to a wide variety of audiences, farmed 3,500 acres of Wisconsin land, received 9 honorary degrees and 21 gold medals from universities and societies both here and abroad in recognition of his contributions to society. He was an expert on Oriental art and owned one of the most important collections in this country—particularly Japanese art.

Along with his buildings and his books, one of his most fruitful accomplishments is the school he conducted as part of his establishment, which he called Taliesin (pronounced tahly-es-sin). Here, since 1932, more than 500 men and women have studied not only architecture but the bigger art of being a full, rounded, disciplined person. They receive a very personal kind of education—more personal than they can find anywhere else in America, probably. To learn architecture is obviously the main reason people come to Taliesin, but what they learn in addition is like a cross-section of Wright's own life.

They are expected to learn, to do adequately with their own hands all the construction trades that are involved with modern building, because they will need to know these skills when they design and supervise the construction of a building in the field, but also (Please turn to page 260)

Capitalizing on the natural scene

Extending gracefully under heavy trees along the water's edge, this building incorporates Alden Dow's home and architectural offices. The small conference room, above, is built into the pond, the water line at sill level. Roof sweeps out over the water, dappling the interior, left, with reflected light. Gently sloping roofs are an equally dominant feature in the interior, giving typically Wrightian interest overhead. Ceiling in main living room, on opposite page, is richly paneled as the room's major architectural element. Concrete masonry walls lend their pattern and texture to the interior also. These walls, inside and out, are designed to make the most of their multi-unit character. Stepped-out rows of masonry accentuate the long horizontals with shadow lines. Elsewhere, as seen below, diagonal walls are constructed with blocks kept square with the main plan, producing a dominantly vertical pattern. This complex building owes its tranquility to this full, unforced, and natural development of building site and materials.



Wright was one of the Founders of House Beautiful

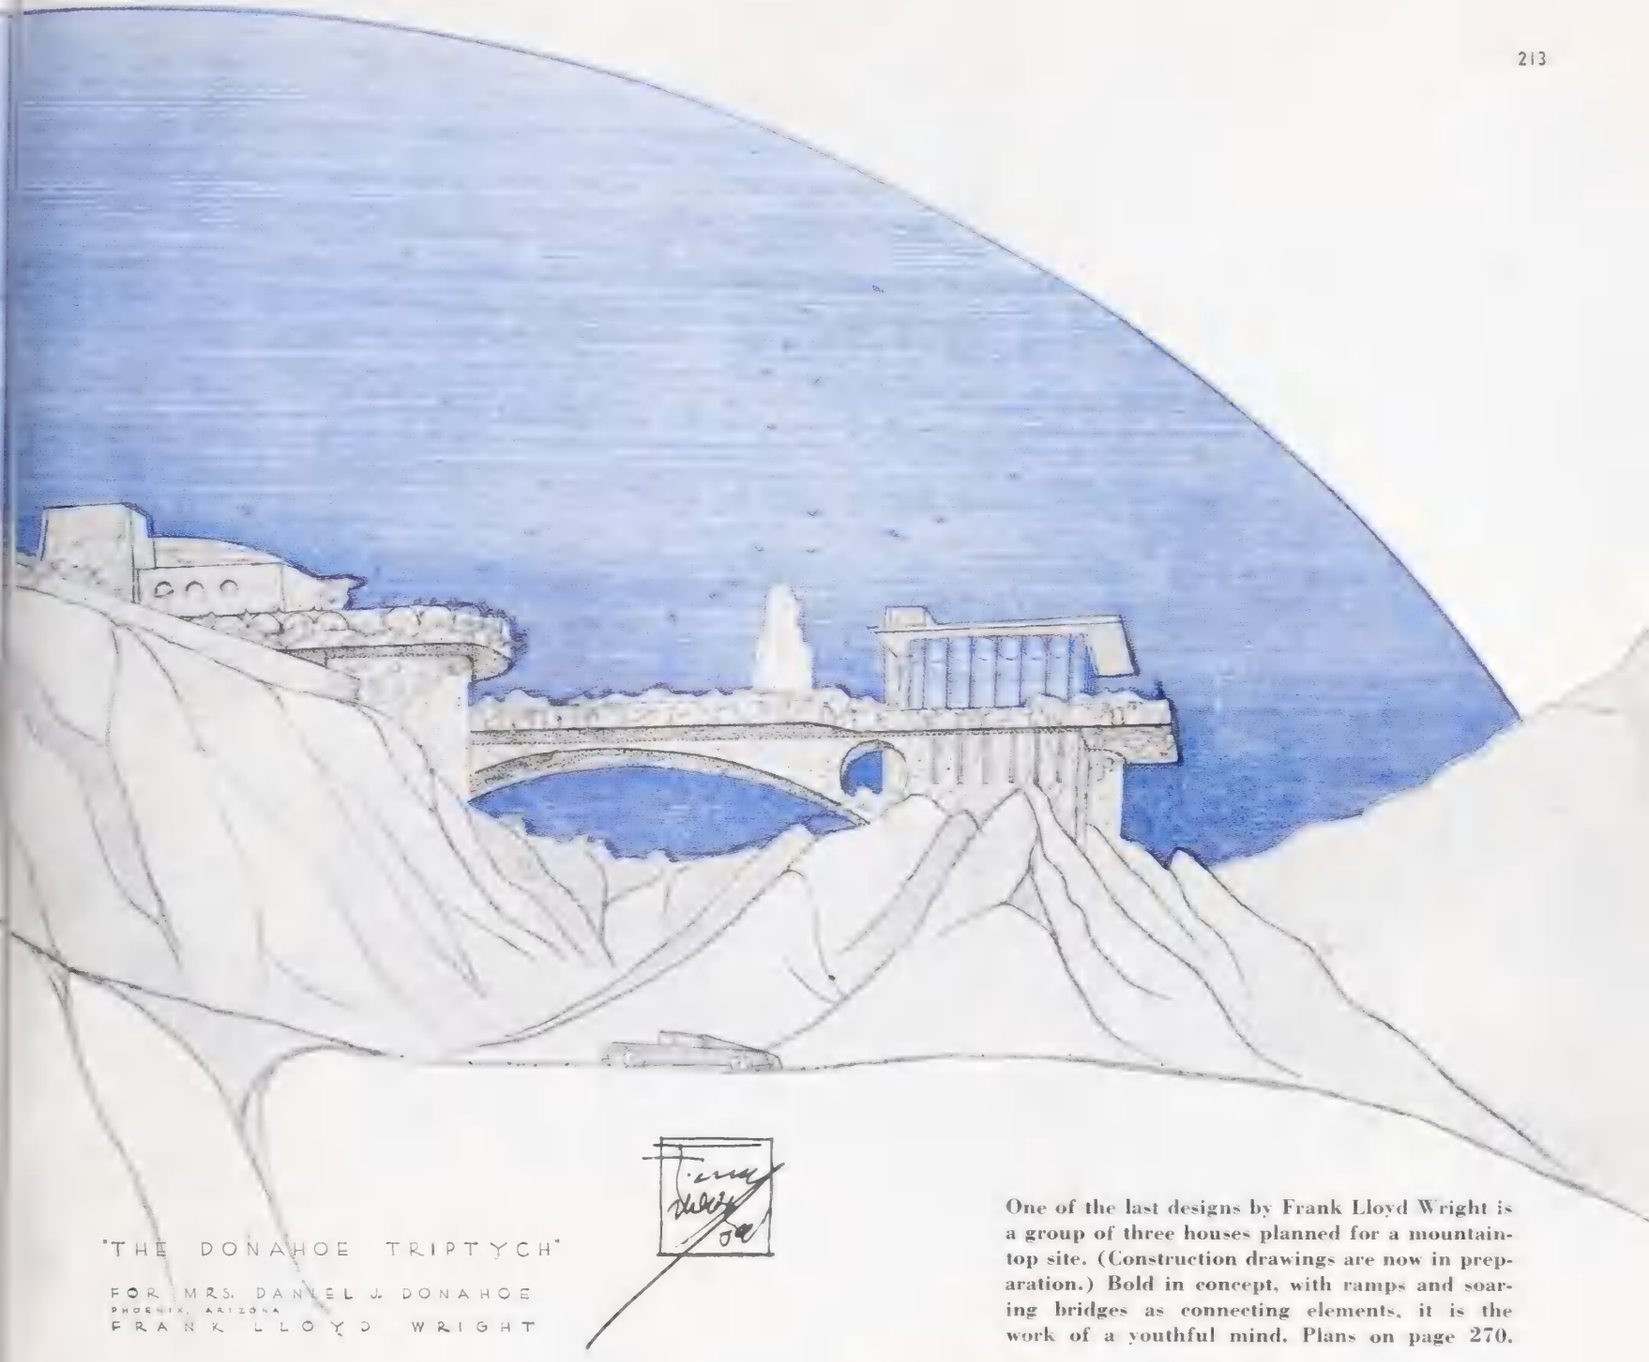
Frank Lloyd Wright was one of three men who were the ideological founders of this magazine. Wright, William C. Gannett, and W. H. Winslow produced a book of essay-sermons entitled "The House Beautiful," in the winter of 1896-7. Only ninety deluxe copies were printed, but they were circulated and read by a good number of socially-aware Chicagoans.

The essays crusaded for a more human approach to creating a home, and against materialistic show. One such essay called "House Furnishing" is reprinted on page 300. As to content it could be something that either Mr. Wright or HOUSE BEAUTIFUL might have written in 1959. Certainly throughout these sixty-three years we have tried to edit by Wrightian precepts and principles.

The Stature of a Genius

Work Continues in the Taliesin Studio

The experienced organization of 19 key men—registered architects, engineers, and designers—who worked closely with Mr. Wright for from 20 to 27 years, are continuing the work already in progress in the studio and are accepting many new projects of all types. The firm, Taliesin Associated Architects, has offices at Taliesin in Wisconsin and near Phoenix, Arizona. They also have offices in San Francisco, Phoenix, Ariz., and Honolulu, Hawaii.



For a list of other architects who understand and use Wrightian principles, turn to page 266.

● A man who is repeatedly called a genius for a good part of his lifetime could become hopelessly spoiled and a captive of his own reputation. Frank Lloyd Wright undoubtedly heard, but he lived so completely by his own standards that he did not even accept the world's definition of the word.

"I am not really a genius," he once said. "I just have longer antennae than other people."

To hundreds of thousands of present-day Americans, who knew him only through the newspapers and his numerous appearances on television, Frank Lloyd Wright was the personification of architecture as well as an incorrigible genius. They held an affection for him generally reserved for their sports heroes and entertainment idols. To them he was a somewhat foolhardy spirit who had dared the gods for reasons which they were not prepared to understand or to appreciate. But they did appreciate his having dared. To them he represented their idea of an American. He was the person who many of them, in their innermost hearts, would have desired to be and were not: an iconoclast, a non-conformist, and a great and free individual.

One of the last designs by Frank Lloyd Wright is a group of three houses planned for a mountain-top site. (Construction drawings are now in preparation.) Bold in concept, with ramps and soaring bridges as connecting elements, it is the work of a youthful mind. Plans on page 270.

To many of the present generation of practicing architects who were teethed upon the principles which Frank Lloyd Wright had so strongly defended against the onslaught of Roman Classicism following the Chicago World's Fair of 1893. he was an inspiration. But it often came to them as something of a surprise and a shock to realize that the Frank Lloyd Wright. whom they had learned about in their architectural history courses and whom they had accepted as a figure relegated to the dusty pages of history. was also the same energetic. exuberant Frank Lloyd Wright who was outpacing them in his creative output with a profusion of fresh ideas from a seemingly inexhaustible source of inspiration.

His creative power which had blazed brightly at the turn of the 20th Century. and which might have been expected to diminish with his increasing age. had only grown brighter with the passing of time. Its intensity far outshone many of the lesser lights kindled from his flame.

To architects of the future. Frank Lloyd Wright will be both an inspiration and (Please turn to page 270)

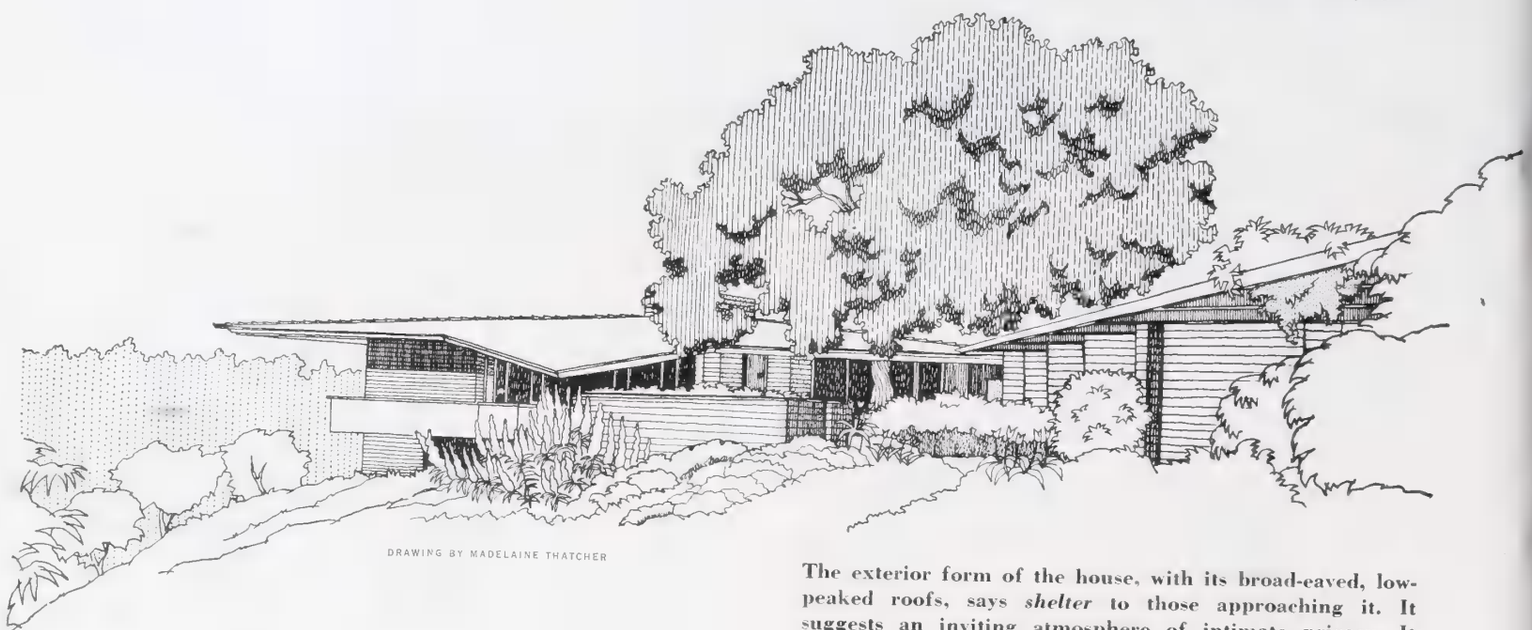
Shelter that encloses without confining



By CURTIS BESINGER

●Frank Lloyd Wright's most important contribution to architecture is the one always sensed and enjoyed by the people in one of his buildings but seldom understood. They feel that there is a different quality in his work, but they do not know what it is. Essentially it is what he referred to as "a true liberation of life and light within walls."

Architects readily acknowledge that he helped to liberate architecture, in that he helped to free it from its bondage to the past, and that he has, from his own daring example, given encouragement to others to work with new materials, new techniques and new structural forms.

But he has also shown that it is possible to build a sense of liberation into a building. This "liberation" is not so much in the material form of the building as it is in the effect it has as an environment upon those living in it.

The exterior form of the house, with its broad-eaved, low-peaked roofs, says shelter to those approaching it. It suggests an inviting atmosphere of intimate privacy. It is snuggled close to the ground on the uphill side (seen in view from street, photo below) to keep it nearer to the ground on the downhill side, seen in the sketch above.

From the outdoor dining area on the terrace, one has a view of the hillside and of the surrounding tree-covered slopes. This open vantage point, screened from the road by the carport and house, is an unconfined, yet private, outdoor area.

The outdoor entrance area, which guests enter down steps at the right, provides a covered connection between the carport and the enclosed area of the house. The entrance to the outdoor living area is near the center of the picture. See how the masonry piers and the planting in the openings is an effective screen between these adjoining outdoor areas, yet it does not inhospitably say "stay out."

On the living terrace, although in the out-of-doors, one has a sense of being protected, but not shut in. The large live oak around which the house was planned forms a non-restricting shelter overhead, and the screen, seen from the opposite site in the photo above, with its openness and interweaving of plants and piers, lets one sense without seeing it the continuity of the surrounding space.

The continuity of the interior spaces of the house is readily evident in this view from the dining space into that of the living room at left and of the study-guest room at right. The masonry mass at the center contains the bath and the study and living room fireplaces. In both the plan and photos note that, although minor spaces do have articulated forms, the borders between them are not distinctly defined. Observe how the ceiling ties all together.

One sees this view as he goes from the public entrance area to the private living area of the terrace. The door to the enclosed portion of the house is at the extreme right. Note how the projecting bay of living room, with its low-sweeping roof, frames the landscape beyond and effects an intermingling of what is outside and inside—how the steps in foreground carry your eye down the hillslope relating you to the trees beyond. The interweaving of elements and establishing of inter-relationships between spaces, the environment, and the inhabitants help to give a sense of liberation.

In the plan one can see numerous examples of the ways in which spaces, both inside and outside, are interwoven and interpenetrated to become one continuous space, how a space may have a sense of pushing or pulling in relation to an adjoining space setting up a dynamic interaction between them. Observe how the outside terrace penetrates into the dining space; how the spaces on both sides of the brick pier screen are interwoven; how the living space pushes out into the exterior space; how a part of the terrace near the carport draws back under the roof to form a sheltered area.

SHELTER THAT ENCLOSES

Architect Aaron Green, in designing this house for Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Bartholomew, has used some of the techniques of planning and building which Mr. Wright discovered and developed in his desire to give this liberating quality to building. You will also find some of these techniques incorporated in the other houses in this issue.

These techniques developed out of a desire to make of a house something more than the defensive device which our ancestors had known and needed. In general the outside was something hostile against which one surrounded himself with a protective shell. Houses, as they had developed through the centuries, had become, in essence, a collection of these protective shells. But walls which shut out enemies and wild animals also shut in their occupants. And, before the extensive manufacture of glass, walls which shut out the cold also (Please turn to page 286)

This view from the living area toward the exterior terrace, the entrance and dining area with kitchen beyond, shows the use of walls as screen elements which permit a continuity of inner and outer space.

The living room fireplace, a part of the central masonry mass of house, has become more than a decorative spot on a wall. As used here it is an integral element in the shaping of the interior space.

Television and hi-fi equipment is concealed in the group of cabinets opposite the steps (seen in the photo at top of page) from the entrance and dining area down into the living room. Furnishings and equipment are integral with structure.

A pair of doors opens to reveal the TV screen. Above it and behind a diamond-shaped cloth panel are the speakers for the hi-fi equipment. A drop-front panel conceals the pull-out record player. Controls are on low table top at end of seat.

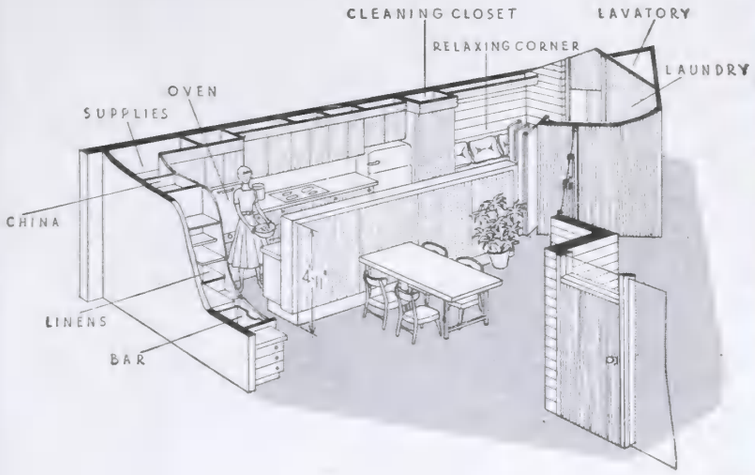
By letting rooms borrow vistas from each other, greater spaciousness is achieved

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHER

The study-guest room is a balcony-like space which is a continuous part of the living space, except when the folding wooden screen is drawn across the opening for privacy (as at upper left). From this open, yet intimate, space one has views in three directions: through the windows (at right) and through those of living and dining areas.

A portion of the adjoining study is seen in this view of the living room fireplace corner. Note how spaces flow together at this point to make the guest room a part of the living room and increase the apparent size of both. An extra extension of the visual limit of living room is added by the glimpse of sky seen through corner of study.



ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

In this view of study-guest room one can see how, through the manner in which the glass is used, the sense of separation between inside and out is almost completely eliminated. The view of the landscape is not framed by a hole in the wall but by the ceiling, the window ledge, the pairs of structural members with the ventilating sash between.

The dining area is the central point in the house to which all of the other spaces are related, since the owners like to entertain by sharing with their friends the pleasures of the fine art of cooking. Near it are the kitchen (behind the low screen wall), the living room, and the exterior terrace (at right), where they may live and entertain in mild weather.

The island unit which serves as one wall of the kitchen area and which shields it from the view of guests in the dining area is high enough to provide storage space above the counter on open shelves and yet not so high that the housewife, who does all of her own cooking when entertaining, is shut away from her guests. Skylights flood the area with light.

Interior Space as Architectural Poetry

Wright's more human approach to shelter was to ennoble and enrich the life lived within

By JOHN DEKOVEN HILL

● The big difference between the Wrightian point of view and all other schools of thought (whether Modern or Traditional) lies in what is considered the main goal. Modernists and Traditionalists both put the appearance of the outside of the building, as seen from the street, as the number one consideration.

Wright believed that the interior space should be the prime consideration, and to make it interesting, poetic, and uplifting should be the basis for the whole design. Whether it is a living room, church, or office, Wright felt that the inside space could be formed in such a way as to create an atmosphere that could lift everyday human activities and give significance, delight, and dignity to the life the structure sheltered.

This difference, seemingly slight to a layman, is a distance as far as north and south poles. The other Modernists and Traditionalists start with the "look" of the building rather than how it works, feels, and lives. They take a form and fit man's activities into it. Wright starts with the desire to make a great circumstance (Please turn the page)

Space created inside is what mattered most to Frank Lloyd Wright. In the meeting room of the Unitarian church in Madison, below, a great soaring roof rises over the speaker's rostrum and choir balcony in a form similar to hands in prayer. Upward sweep toward open end of room creates an expansive interior space that instills repose and optimism in contrast to the usual awesome church interior. Roof extends beyond to cut out sky glare, letting natural scene be present as the background for worship.

The engraving below has color errors. The ceiling is beige and the wood is natural.

In Mr. Wright's words "a glorified tent," the living room at Taliesin West shows how daylight and sun can be used as an architectural medium. The luminous glow through the canvas overhead creates a very special atmosphere. More pictures of "the glorified tent" on page 295.

A floor plan laid out on oblique angles instead of conventional square corners was one of Wright's means of giving fluidity to the interior. In the living room shown below, the hexagon forms are echoed overhead in the slope of the roof. Dees-Porch & Grunberg, architects.

Bringing light into the heart of a room from above helps make interesting space. Changes in ceiling and floor levels and generous glass area opening room to garden help create interest and bigness beyond actual dimensions. Living room in the home of Karl Kamrath, architect.

INTERIOR SPACE

AS ARCHITECTURAL POETRY

Even a passageway is an opportunity for spacious interest. Repeated vertical rhythms in mullions and concrete columns help to dramatize the height of the ceiling. Openness above partition to adjoining rooms lends airiness and bigness to this narrow space. This hint of what is beyond invites you to see what it is. Low deck, at door height, is a reminder of human scale that further accentuates the vertical dimension by contrast. Florida Southern College.

In a Wright interior the eye is never stopped by a dead end. There is interest wherever it pauses. Imagination is stimulated by glimpses of space beyond the room itself, both within the house and outdoors. Permanent and natural decoration in the living room, below, is achieved out of the pattern of the structure, the soft texture of brick, and mellow wood grain. Long horizontal lines of shelves and easel give the illusion of even greater length.

for the human being to be sheltered by. His great gift was showing how to build for men as significant individuals worthy of a fine environment for every phase of their living.

This humanistic approach means every building is a new problem containing its own solution. New forms are the natural result since each building inevitably becomes an expression of its purpose. Functionalism is the beginning, but only the first small step. Convenience and efficiency are not enough.

The soul suffers claustrophobia. A sense of freedom is necessary for a really healthy, exuberant state of well-being. The confinement of (Please turn to page 280)

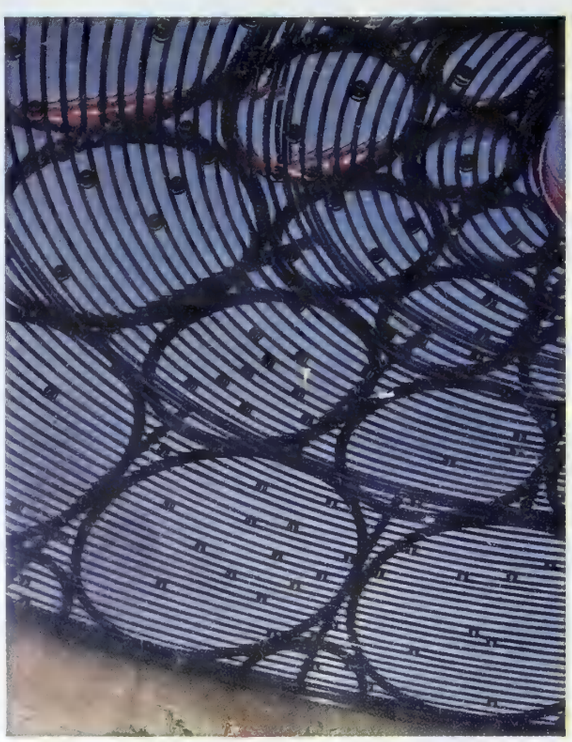
Continuous band of glass under the roof makes the living room above seem unconfined. Like a corner window, it eliminates the usual space boundary visually marked by the meeting of wall and ceiling. Small steel posts on piers support the roof. Night lighting floods upward to heighten the floating look.

(Sorry, but the above engraving should be bluer and grayer.)



The three-dimensional quality of space distinguishes Frank Lloyd Wright's work. Engineering skill like the reinforced concrete structure of the Florida Southern College Chapel, below, is not used as a tour de force or relied on as a satisfactory end in itself, but as a means to gain the desired atmosphere. In this room concrete has been exploited to the fullest in cantilevered slabs and masonry walls, the blocks pierced for colored glass insets.

Hollow glass tubes line the framework of this circular domed skylight. Random lengths of tubing are connected with small glass inserts adding a dewdrop glitter to the design. The arch of the dome itself is also constructed of circular elements.

The whole geometric abstraction is a shimmering decoration for the space below, endlessly varying according to the light of the sky. As seen below, at three different times of day, it brings into the room changing moods of light and color.

FIVE PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

A composition in arcs both in plan and in volume is seen at left in a reception room in the Johnson's Wax administration building. The shape of the dome is echoed in curved glass partitions; in smaller detail in the round glass tubes and even in shelf edges. This consistency in design gives a wholeness characteristic of Wright's work. When every element is introduced as a contribution to the total scheme the result has quiet harmonious repose.

PHOTOGRAPH BY LISANTI

Another form of skylighting, diffused through reinforced plastic panels, brings glowing light into the center of the room at right to make the central space seem even loftier in contrast to the low-ceilinged alcoves. Ceiling pattern demarking form of structure is typically Wrightian. Artificial lighting is also located within the skylights so the room is as effectively luminous at night. This room designed for the U.S. Rubber Company by Curtis Besinger and John deKoven Hill.

The study at Taliesin North, built in 1911, is a striking example of Wright's ability to endow a space with sheltered security and at the same time create an atmosphere of expansive freedom. Here the many little vistas both horizontal and upward offer mystery and fascination to the eye and mind; yet the total effect is one of serene repose without distraction. The presence of this room, though carefully calculated and literally built-in, seems casual and almost as though it had grown naturally.

Three rooms and entry get benefit of this charming little outdoor spot. Plants seem more precious when seen in such a small scale space.

DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER

● One thing Frank Lloyd Wright firmly believed was that a house should intermingle with Nature in as many agreeable ways as possible. Just as the house was supposed to be a becoming backdrop for man, so Nature and the structure should associate in ways each to enhance the other.

For this end, he had many ways of intermixing structure and Nature. One is to wrap some part of the structure around a piece of garden—totally or partially. One such an example is shown at the upper left, a charming nook on the campus of Florida Southern College in Lakeland, designed by Mr. Wright in 1938.

This same device has been expertly handled in two houses by Taliesin-trained Aaron Green, shown below. In each case the house completely encloses a tiny garden, and the surrounding rooms look into this outdoor enclosure. The result produces a glamorous situation, for the plants seem more remarkable and the foliage more interesting by being so framed.

But there is a dividend beyond the glamour—the fine quality of light created in the surrounding rooms. The light is entirely from above—skylight in the truest sense. Mr. Wright believed that "the best way to light a house was God's way—the natural way," which means light from above, as well (Please turn to page 301)

It is more as if the Howes were surrounded by their hillside and its view of the Wisconsin landscape than by walls and a roof, so close to the land, so open to its surroundings is their two-room house. Everywhere necessity has turned into poetry. Retaining walls (above) are conceived as a lovely series of fern beds; below, walls of native stone run out of the house into the hill, seem to be part of it.

Beyond the Functional —into the Poetic

Wright recognized and imbued his students with the truth that comfort and convenience are not all that human beings require of their shelter. Architecture must nurture man's spirit as well as his body, speaking like poetry to the soul, awakening it to the intangible, yearned-for beauty that all men instinctively seek

● A poet who wrote his sonnets in syllables of stone—that was Frank Lloyd Wright. He was no foe of the functional. Indeed, he insisted that a building always work well. But with a poet's insight he perceived that man's greatest need is spiritual—to feel himself one with the universe, in closer contact with beauty, truth, and the mysterious, abiding forces that are all about him.

Wright knew, as Alfred North Whitehead has said, that "the soul suffers claustrophobia," that every human being feels there is more in him than his situation allows to come out. So Wright thought we should live in surroundings that more nearly reflect our own private, wonderful estimate of ourselves—many-faceted and deep, responding wondrously to the multitude of life's stimuli of mood, people, light, health, and seasons, music, the news—yes, all the experiences of life.

To Wright, architecture's great goal was to surround man in his daily life with opportunities for this break-through. Wood and stone, steel and glass must direct the eye to sights and sensations that invite the soul. A soaring roof line can elevate the heart: a vista opening to sunlit space or to Nature's restful green can restore the spirit.

This is perhaps Wright's greatest legacy. It's the principle that created this cottage of only 842 square feet, the home of John H. Howe, a member of Taliesin Associated Architects. Working closely with Wright for 27 years, he has grasped well the lesson of the poet-builder. (Please turn the page)

The necessary parts of this house (ceiling, walls, openings) evolve into beautiful patterns of themselves, requiring no added embellishment, no concealment. This is how structural truth and beauty become one in Wrightian architecture. Vaulted ceiling follows sloping roof-line. Its essential beams form their own beautiful soaring pattern.

Plan is basically a triangle set in a hillside, its broadest side turned outward to take fullest advantage of a vast view (see living room, above), which increases sense of spaciousness in this very small house (842 sq. ft.).

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHER

Since two sides of the living room are virtually glass, the changing patterns and colors of nature are the Howes' living companions, even in the kitchen, which is only partially screened from the living room by a cabinet.

The play of light and shadow on wood and stone, the unusual angles created by the triangular plan enrich the little house with a mood of mystery, of unexpected delight. Stair (left) leads to bedroom and bath (far left).

In Wrightian houses, light is a new, delightful dimension

It is almost as if Wright rediscovered the fabulous, constantly changing beauty of light. In the home of Mrs. J. G. Ashman, Midland, Mich., designed by Wright-trained Alden Dow, sunbeams, dappled shadows, or moody mistiness surround even mundane chores with a quality of enchantment. Glass-glazed roof of long gallery (left) brings in summertime light filtered through leafy trees outside. To work at the desk at gallery's end (above) is like living in a new, delightful dimension. In winter, trees are bare, and the gallery is flooded with sun.

Out of glass, redwood and the grandeur of Nature, a chapel that seems a prayer in itself

The poetry of space enclosed yet open, of transparent walls that free rather than confine, of height that elevates the spirit yet never dwarfs man—these Wrightian concepts are all inherent in the Wayfarer's Chapel, Palos Verdes, Calif. It is the design of Lloyd Wright, one of his father's most sensitive students. High on a promontory overlooking the sea, this place to pray invites meditation without distraction, brings the grandeur of Nature into the worshiper's very presence. Eventually, when the trees outside are grown, this airy glass chapel will stand in a shady bower. The skyward thrust of the structure and the branching pattern of glass joinings suggest tree-like forms.

Wright, like all poets, was exhorting his fellow men to realize their own mysterious greatness as sentient living creatures. He was saying that the sheltering space in which you live can—and should—reveal to you what a wondrous, rich and reassuring experience it can be to be a human being. If his message was sometimes misunderstood and misinterpreted, it was because architecture had never previously been presented as a medium for freeing the individual and for putting man into personal, intimate contact with his universe.

People who have lived in Wright's houses understand his meaning well, however. And it is from their comments that you get some insight into the new life opened to them by this poetry written in wood and stone, steel and glass.

Mrs. Isadore Zimmerman of Manchester, New Hampshire, says: "The greatest experience of our life has been the actual living in a Frank Lloyd Wright house. It's a sensation you can not describe; you have to experience it. . . . When we awake in the morning we can look through our house to the garden and see the eastern sun come up. We watch the sunlight grow; we watch its shadows change. It's the kind of beauty you can't put into words; it's a feeling, like being on top of a great mountain. Wright's Way with Little Things

● A great many people pay lip service to the idea that you should make your home and your life a work of art.

But nobody ever developed this precept as fully as did Frank Lloyd Wright. He applied his discriminating eye and mind to the smallest things. as well as the biggest. He sought out beauty in all categories—from automobiles and plows to ancient Chinese bronzes or clothes. It was just as important for him to have a beautifully arranged breakfast table as it was to build a beautiful building.

He undertook to get beauty into life by two means: choosing beautiful objects in the first place and then arranging them for use in a beautiful way. This meant that everything to be used must be beautiful: that quality and discrimination must not stop at the kitchen door. Everything must count, beginning with the necessities. To him, making a good arrangement of the salt. pepper and sugar containers on the dinner table was as interesting a proposition and as worthy of your attention as creating a building. All to be seen must satisfy. He believed in organizing the (Please turn to page 316)

Mr. Wright, at the age of 86, standing in front of the living-room entrance at Taliesin North. Jaunty, straight as a sapling, he belied his age in all respects. Behind him you can see pierced and carved wood Chinese panels set into the glazed foyer. This is very typical of the way he made architectural use of art antiquities, putting them to work as they were originally used.

Desk arrangement above, which puts fine old objects to useful modern work, is typical of the way Wright brought beauty to the daily necessities. A museum-caliber bronze Chinese cup holds pencils. Old Japanese smoking set holds address book, foreign dictionaries, stamp box. Modern Japanese lacquer boxes (hexagons) hold paper clips, rubber bands, measuring tapes, etc. But above all, please note the recurring hexagon motif: as painted pattern in the far round bowls and as three-dimensional solid hexagons in the foreground. Such a little trick! Yet it gives cohesiveness and unity to a miscellany of objects, binding them all together into an integrated whole.

Mr. Wright had a gift for taking things that had to be and making them contribute as an easy, natural part of that situation. When he threw pillows and a blanket on a couch he made them look so inviting that you wanted to go immediately and lie down. It was a studied, deft touch—not a thoughtless one. But it was not "for effect." Rather it was to make a casual and attractive convenience out of what was going to be there anyway. His arrangements were not to show off, but to make the situation inviting by making it irresistible. He was not saying, "Look at me, how clever I am!" Rather he was saying, "Come, rest yourself in this pleasant situation."

Exploiting the rich possibilities in materials

● Every building material, man-made or natural, has within its nature its own peculiar beauty. In natural materials, like stone and wood, this beauty is easy to see and many ways to take advantage of their natural qualities are fairly obvious. On the other hand, some of our modern building materials which have tremendous latent possibilities have hardly been explored beyond the realm of engineering technic. This intellectual investigation and understanding is certainly a necessary first step. But we are surrounded with well-built examples of modern construction that are frequently ugly and at best inoffensive.

To go beyond practicality to something more deeply satisfying requires sympathy and insight on the part of the designer—not a matter of added expense. Loveliness results when imagination is applied with genuine loving interest. Wright proved that the elements in a building, like orchestration in great music, can be made powerful contributors, each in its own way, to the beauty of the total environment.

"We took the concrete block and made it live as a thing of beauty, textured like the trees among which it stood." A striking example of Wright's ability to see the romantic possibilities inherent in the plasticity of concrete. Deeply patterned blocks are used inside and out in this California house, built in 1921.

All the photographs on these two pages are illustrations of Frank Lloyd Wright's work in concrete. These are only a very few among his many and varied poetic developments of this material. Below, the flowing continuity of reinforced concrete is combined with block masonry with serene fluidity. Residence of Mr. and Mrs. David Wright. For interior view, see page 247.

Passageway, above, is in a house built completely of concrete blocks, even the roof. Ceiling blocks are coffered, creating an over-all pattern throughout the house. Same coffered block, without center panel, is glazed to make lacelike side walls. Extra dividend of sunlight pattern is something Wright always considered and designed for. More proof that common materials, though common in supply, need not remain common in their effect

This building, designed by Alfred Browning Parker, shows that he understood Frank Lloyd Wright's attitude about materials. Here he has used concrete, appropriately and imaginatively, and raised it above the average and ordinary usage of this common material. By the use of pierced concrete block, he has made it into a lacy filigree, reminiscent of a trellis, yet capable of being glazed.

Constructed entirely of poured concrete and specially cast block units, the building has a serene and inviting appearance. Long uninterrupted horizontal lines give it a graceful simplicity and quiet repose in the landscape. In contrast to plain surfaces, walls of pierced block form big areas of over-all pattern. The grille-like openwork of these glazed walls creates a veiled, intriguing mystery. Block walls are reinforced with steel bars both vertically and horizontally, and reinforcing channels are filled with poured concrete. The result is a warp-and-weft fabric strong enough to bear the weight of a concrete roof.

Continuous walls of block units from floor to ceiling have glass inserts, giving the interior cheerful lightness without the feeling of uncomfortable exposure, establishing an atmosphere of shelter and separation from outside distraction without sacrifice of openness and light. Concrete roof slab is coffered in a square grid. The recesses create an overall texture and assure proper acoustics. Lighting fixtures, set into these panels where needed, punctuate the pattern of the ceiling without destroying its continuity.

Ethereal rainbow tints flood ornamental richness through the interior. Subtly colored glass set into the wall blocks along with clear panels, translates outside glare into a soothing mellow glow that spreads a quiet tapestry of soft color and pattern inside. The long narrow proportion of the block units gives a predominantly horizontal stratification to these walls, visually dramatizing the length of the long uninterrupted areas. Patterning of block ends, resulting in an irregular profile at the vertical joints, adds to horizontal look. Such a building obviously is air-conditioned year round.

In this delightful setting there is a beauty that has nothing to do with cost, high or low. It isn't due to rare, expensive, or exotic materials. It is the rewarding result of real understanding, applied by the designer, to create a beautiful circumstance by capitalizing on common and easily used materials.

When materials and the structure itself contribute their own decorative interest as effectively as they do here, the spaces inside effortlessly assume a natural beauty free of the need for the decorative effects and theatrical tricks that have to be used to bring vitality into the conventional plain box-shaped room.

The simple straight-line form of boards as they come from the lumber mill are used to advantage to give a quiet horizontality to the wood walls of this house. Entrance, above, is sheltered by an openwork trellis, ornamentally constructed of mitred boards and square wood blocks. Side panel at door echoes the spacing of the wall boards.

Lumber and blocks are materials for the artist

The patio, partially enclosed by the house, is spanned by wood beams to carry vines overhead. It is a sheltered, private outdoor room complete with its own storage cabinets for games and furnishings. The consistency of rectilinear pattern is present everywhere in the wood construction and is repeatedly echoed by unit markings in the concrete floor slab and the deeply raked joints that accentuate the cast-stone block units in masonry walls and columns. Kitchen is at left. Glass door opens to loggia and television room. The children's wing is beyond with a play court adjoining the patio at the right. The space thus serves as a central entertainment and relaxing area.

The architect David George, a student of Frank Lloyd Wright, has created a very commendable house using a number of Wrightian principles. Using a square as a design motif, he has created great variety within it. It is essentially a flat-roofed house, but he has made one soaring space in the living room, whose peaked roof shows here.

Roofed patio off the living room repeats the motif of the square, used so intricately it becomes lacework. Motif occurs at entrance.

A curved ramp sweeping upward in a great circle dominates the interior of this shop as a central feature of the space. Its circular form is echoed and re-echoed against a secondary interplay of squares in every form and pattern present—from the richly ornamental plastic ceiling to the furniture and display shelves. Even the little stools are circles on square bases. Thus the total design, based on curved and circular divisions within a square, encompasses all parts to bring about a richer, subtly powerful atmosphere. V. C. Integration:

the art of knitting everything together into one stronger whole

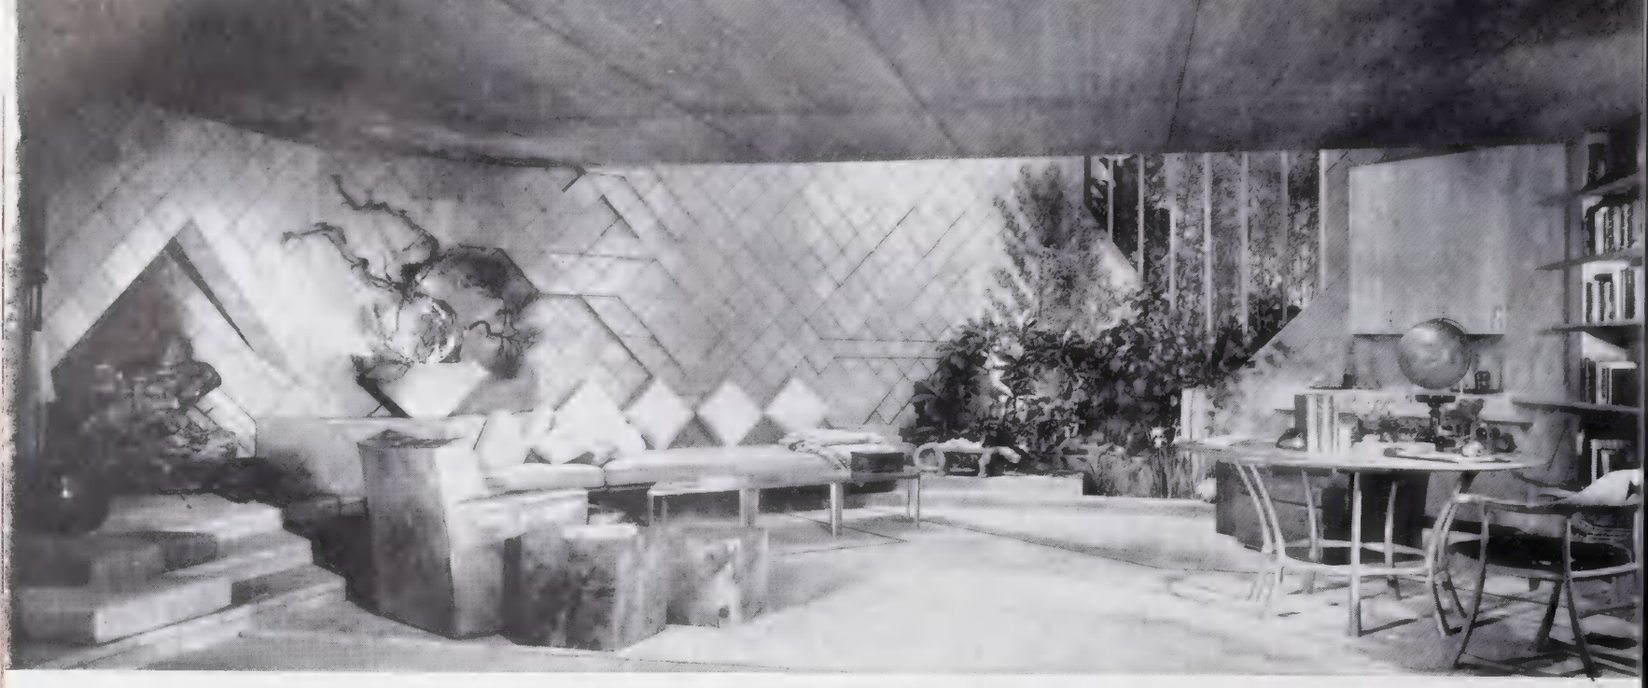
● The level of success of any building depends on the architect's ability to develop a big concept so completely that even the smallest part contributes to the over-all. When this attention and care extend from the form and structure of the building down to the smallest hardware item, the result is harmony with many levels of interest. When all the parts are aesthetically related to the bigger whole, instead of being a collection of miscellaneous unrelated features, the whole then becomes greater than the sum of its parts.

The nature of this refinement is inevitably suggested by the general plan and structural pattern. Like the growth pattern of a plant, a theme can be developed and consistently embroidered to create an integrated whole without the distraction of unrelated—therefore jarring—notes.

This full development of one theme permits a great depth of detail and embellishment without risk of a restless or confusing result. It is a matter of keeping the parts subordinate to, and consistent with, the whole, so they contribute appropriately in form and color without demanding special attention to themselves.

The cheerful interplay of circles on circles as a theme for a whole house

The flow of lines and spaces in the house above brings about an almost liquid restfulness to the eye and mind. Yet the total impression is one of underlying order, controlled but not rigid. The plan of the entire house and garden is based on circles and pure arcs, creating a fascinating fluidity in the relationship of spaces inside and out—an ease in transition from one part to another. Devoid of arbitrary free-form effects, this interweaving of geometric forms knits together into a complete, quiet composition of softly curving beauty.



Little unobvious touches that do not call special attention to themselves nonetheless contribute to the success of the whole ensemble. When thought is given to even the smallest details and they are designed or selected with the total scheme in mind, clutter and fussiness can be avoided. At far right, the entrance hall is defined by a pattern of circular insets leading through the house to the garden beyond. Decorative accessories, like the round bronze plaque on the entrance doors and the circular seat and lantern globe, become appropriate contributors to the whole.

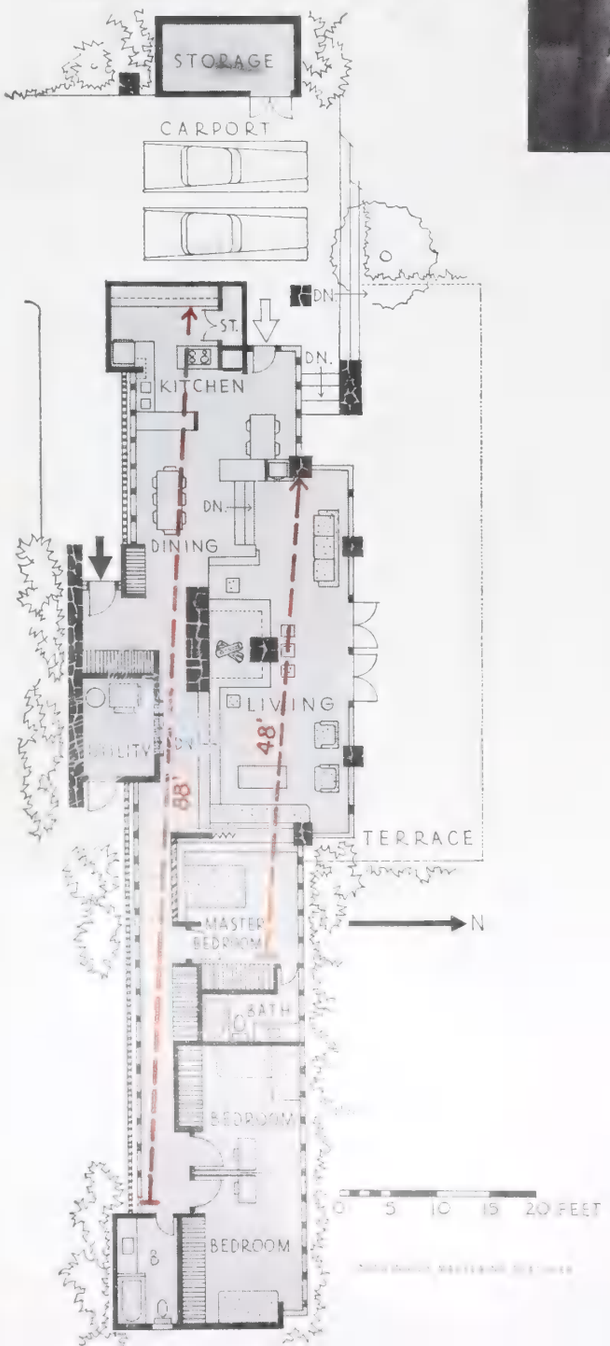
This room was designed with an underlying consistency, like measures in music. It all stems from multiples or divisions of an 8-inch square

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The serene impression of this room comes from the affinity each part has for all of the others. The textural richness of these concrete block walls, achieved by varying projections of the square and triangular units, forms a geometric bas-relief that is extended and amplified, by repetition and variation, in the forms of the built-in cabinets, furniture, and accessories. The eight-inch dimension of the block units establishes a diagonal unit system that is consistently maintained in all the dimensions in the room, from the basic floor plan down to small details like the fireplace grate, the couch pillows, and the window opening. Even the round vase is cast to the angle of the block courses and to line up in height with the wall blocks.



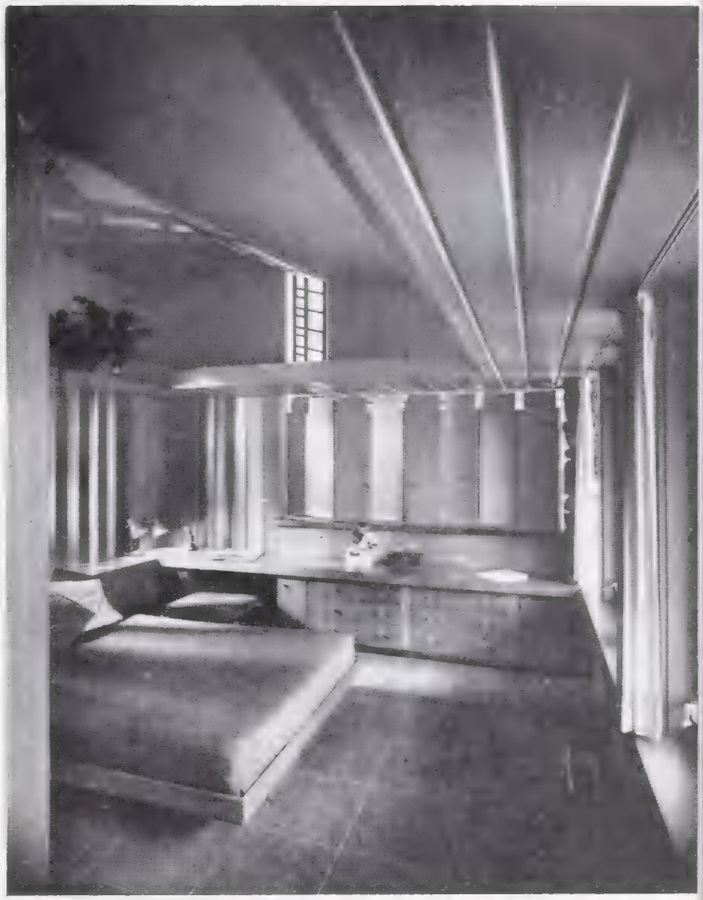
Like measures in music, this underlying consistency, in multiples and divisions of the unit, brings variety within unity to the room. Without being obvious or rigid like a monotonous drumbeat, it establishes an overall rhythm—or unseen framework—within which all the parts fall together without discord.

The pattern of the carpet (see right) is hooked on the bias in an abstraction based on the triangle theme, worked within the same unit system—a flat-lying design that provides warm color and pattern without distraction. Nesting coffee tables also play their part in the total design. Room designed by John deKoven Hill.

Open plan of this house creates long vistas (dotted lines on the plan below) that give a sense of spaciousness no matter where you are in the house. Standing by the utility room (above) you can look through the dining area over the counter baffles to the far wall of the kitchen. Ceiling joint lines accentuate length.

To turn an open-plan house into more than vast, exposed space, Wright found architectural devices to shape the space into useful segments. Two such devices here, in a house by one of his former students: the change in floor levels, the see-beyond but protective half-partition.

The Open Plan



—a way to gain spaciousness

By GUY HENLE

● By destroying the organization of space into "boxes beside boxes or inside boxes called rooms," Wright gave us the Open Plan. In doing so, he laid bare one of the many contradictory elements in the nature of man: the emotional desire for liberating space vs. the primitive need for shelter and privacy. But so great was Wright's understanding that his open-plan houses provided both. "I declared the whole lower floor as one room," he said, "then I screened various portions of the big room for certain domestic purposes like cooking, dining, and reading." Thus, his was an open plan, but on a human scale, using architectural devices to shape the space into useful segments. Others, unsuccessfully embracing the idea, developed vast areas in which there was neither shelter nor privacy, only a sense of exposure. The house on these pages, designed by a former Wright student, illustrates well the Wrightian approach to the open plan. There are no walls or doors from the living room to the dining room or from the dining room (Please turn to page 298)

Even the master bedroom can join the central living space

In most open-plan houses the partition-free area does not touch the bedrooms. Here, because he placed the master bedroom adjacent to the main living space, Architect Jones was able to join it visually to this central core. A four-foot-high wall opening, over ten feet wide, has a folding screen that glides back to reveal the living room. The screen is open in the photograph (above left) and you can look through to the TV set on the far wall, a distance of 48 feet. The continuation of the deep-grooved ceiling ties the two rooms even closer together. When privacy is desired, the screen is closed (above right). At left, a view toward the bedroom.

Wright's skill with ornament shows best when he had the chance to elaborate the minor and less significant details of a house into a rich brocade of design. This detail of the rug (shown opposite) is a fine example. The house it was made for is a circle and portions of circles—not only vertically and horizontally but in the third dimension. So the rug simply makes the structural pattern visibly apparent in yet another way.

Notice how, even though design is complex, it still "lies flat." There is no circle lying on top of another—as solids — which would make you feel you might trip or stumble. They intersect, but do not overlap. Notice how circles finally curl around concrete.

Wright Considered Ornament Desirable

● Many puritanical men have been the offspring of profligate parents. And so many modern architects, their philosophy and theories conceived in an orgy of ornament at the turn of this century (when architecture in general was in a somewhat decadent state), have drawn away from any natural display of feeling. To them ornament is a mortal sin. Dry austerity is their desired ultimate.

But Frank Lloyd Wright, fully conscious of the excesses of his predecessors and protesting against them, was not inclined to do penance for their sins, or to deny his work the marks of a joyful spirit.

While other architects were being self-righteously pure and uncontaminated, Frank Lloyd Wright was wholeheartedly being his exuberant self, a vigorous being with the human desire to carry his work to its full expression —including the qualifying patterns of ornament. He was tempted at times to excesses and fully aware of the temptation. Ornament could be misused and overdone. It could be meaningless and without content, just as manners, the stylized bloom of human contact and social life, can become hollow form and pretense.

But to him a building without its complement of ornament was like a face stripped of its features, an anonymous skull. To him, ornament on a building was as natural as plumage to a bird, blossoms to a plant, or music and poetry to the human spirit. (Please turn to page 292)

Wright had always developed ornament for his houses since the earliest days. This fragment of stained glass is from the children's playhouse on the Coonley estate (1908) derived from the gaiety of balloons and confetti. There were many variations on this theme in the playhouse. He considered this a way to soften the severity of the rectangle and to effect an easier meeting between architecture and Nature.

Wright designed this rug for one of his houses which was based upon a circular plan. It shows that it is possible to achieve a great freedom in form and yet stay within the limiting discipline of a chosen geometry. In much the same manner, a gifted composer may develop a simple musical theme into a rich, orchestrated symphonic structure. Rug is in home designed for Mr. and Mrs. David Wright and was made by V'Soske.

A utilitarian feature, a folding screen, is lifted above mere satisfaction of a need by its pattern of color and gold leaf. Note how the design is agreeably related to the rectangular character of the structure and to the scale of the brick work and to the rug beyond it, which was designed by Mr. Wright for this house. Rug and screen are ornamental features which strengthen the quality and character of the house.

Recognizing the essence of its natural environment, with its exuberant forms and references to tropical foliage and color, this mural, executed in paint and gold leaf on cypress plywood, is the decorative feature of the two-story reception area in the Florida home of Mr. and Mrs. A. Leo Cohen, which was designed by Alfred Browning Parker, architect.

The ever-changing play of light and color in this mural executed for a house planned by Charles Montooth, architect with Taliesin Associates, is a constant source of delight. It derives from the forms and colors of bougainvillea and also from the circular floor plan of the house. Even the horizontal joints of the concrete blocks are controlling guides. Mr. Masselink has, with clear and colored glass and gold leaf, accomplished a work which echoes the materials and the curved structure of the house. At the same time, it is also in harmony with the natural forms of the foliage with which it is seen in relationship. The mural points up and complements the happy merging of Nature and architecture, particularly if one compares it with the customary sort of uncommunicative cold war that can exist between a work of art and Nature. Note how the joints of wall, visible through the glass, are woven into the design.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Curing the flaws in a brownstone apartment in a Wrightian manner required mainly the ability to organize and unify a lot of unrelated doors and openings into one whole. This was done by replacing the old doors with new series of folding ones, all topped with a wood deck which wraps around one corner and travels toward the windows, where it fades away against a jog in the wall. Besides unifying the openings, the remodeling aimed to annihilate the sense of where the corners are, as well as the flat plane of the wall. The many folding doors set up a new rhythm of new planes.

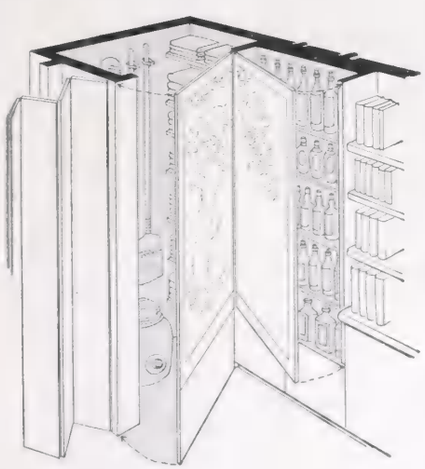
The Wrightian Look built into an Existing Structure

Wright's way was to take what was good about a place (or a person) and play it up. Then, if possible, add something good beyond that

● It is a Wrightian principle that if you confuse the boundaries of a space and make the planes irregular so the eye is not sure where they are, you have made the space bigger optically, to say nothing of more interesting. The limits of the confines are the limits of the eye, so don't let the eye be too sure about what it sees. In other words, confuse the boundaries. Do not let them be obvious.

This room in a city brownstone started with three better-than-average features: more than ordinary height, a nice fireplace and nearly a wall of window. The goal was to make these count, but also to cure the rather disorganized and jumbled entrance wall, with too many doors and openings.

By adding a low deck, at door height, some reminder of human scale is brought into the room, thus making the high part seem higher. Also this low deck makes the room seem wider by emphasizing the horizontal. Optically it seems to be four feet wider. Compare the before and after photographs below, on left and right.

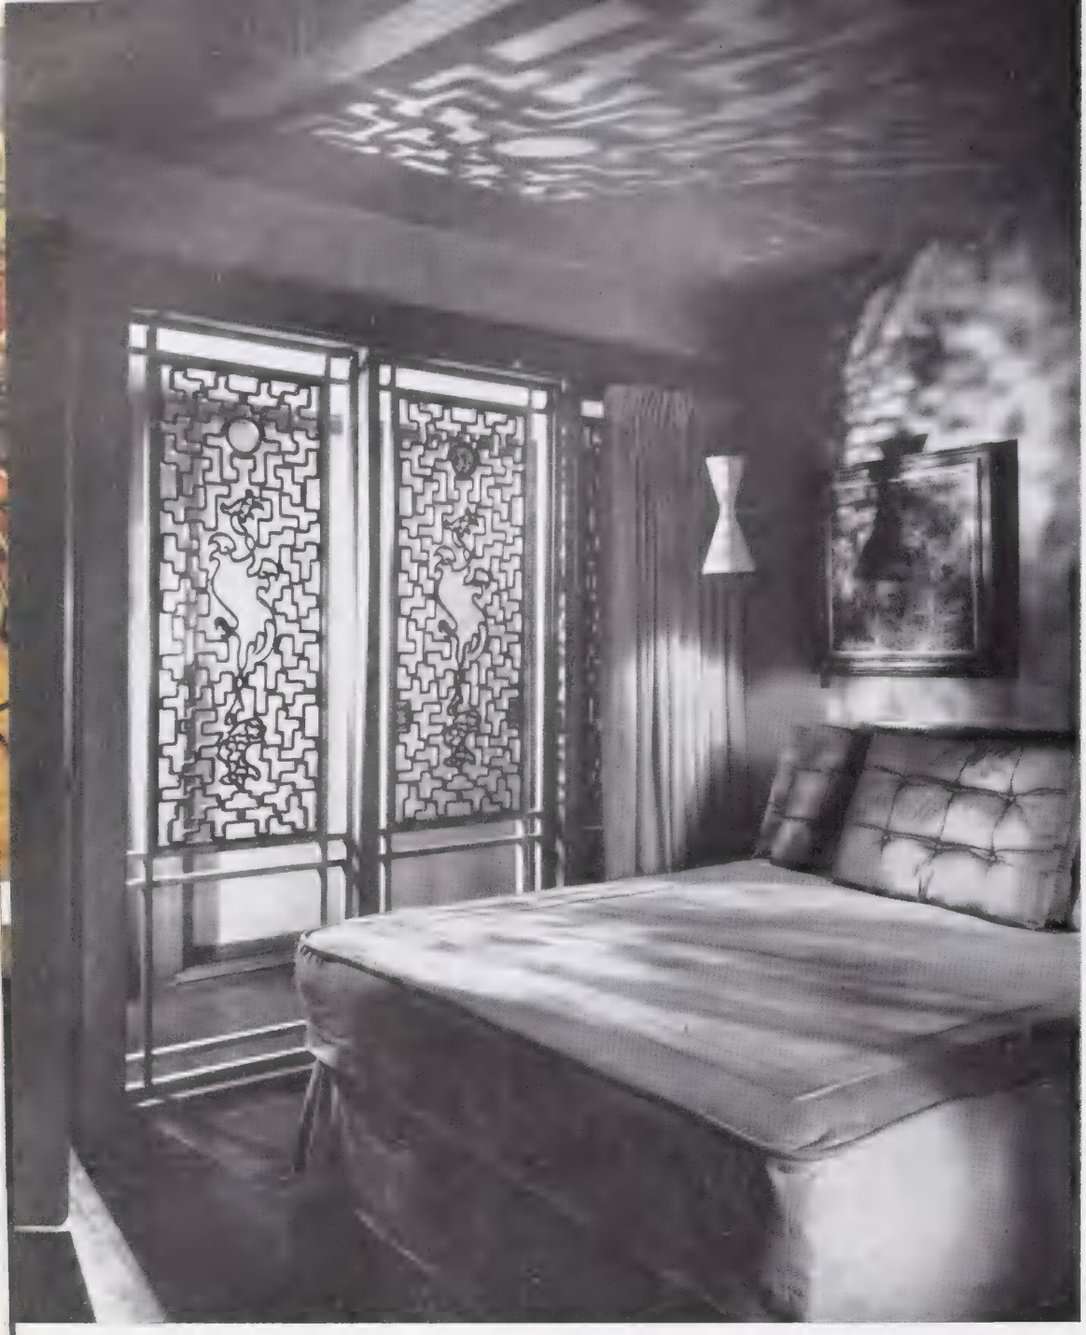


By carrying the deck and the Japanese screen around the corners, the boxy feeling was destroyed, again making the room seem bigger. The bookshelves and the mirror behind them contribute further by annihilating your sureness about where the wall is.

The series of tall, narrow folding doors, of the same cherry plywood as the deck, (plus the Japanese screen) read to the eye as one dark unit, unifying the whole end of the room. A group of these folding doors even partially obscure the entrance door, and since they all appear more like screens, presenting many planes to the eye, they contribute to the annihilation of the six customary planes of the box. (See article about "Exploding the Box" on page 256, this issue.)

Even the dried bouquet on the deck in the upper left hides the real corner.

Thus the terminations of the walls—the corners—are removed, optically speaking, or minimized.



A dividend, from this kind of designing, is that it lets you introduce a richness of interest which is not possible when your goal is to emphasize the planes, as in Bauhaus architecture. Room designed by John DeKoven Hill.

By adding bookshelves, more storage was gained. They in turn created a new cupboard nine inches deep by 36 inches wide. Not a lot, but in a small apartment any new storage is welcome. And it all came about as a development from solving the aesthetic problem.

TWO BLACK AND WHITE PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

These intricately patterned panels of fretwork are put to work by William Bernoudy, architect, in his own home, in a manner that allows them to be enjoyed both aesthetically and practically. Used to give seclusion to a sleeping area, their openness allows free circulation of air. Seen either in bright light or in silhouette the panels themselves have visual interest. Lighted from behind they cast intriguing patterns of shadow upon the walls and ceilings. Draperies may be drawn across screen to shut out light from adjoining area or to create privacy and intimacy for area.

Architectural Use of Fine Possessions

● A person's possessions may gang together as unassimilated elements in his home or they may stand apart in a withdrawn isolation. Neither of these is a happy state of affairs.

Frank Lloyd Wright has shown how possessions may be brought into architecture, and, even though they are not strictly utilitarian objects, may be put to work architecturally to become a part of a whole, working together instead of floating around loose as disruptive and disuniting elements.

They may be used as accents and punctuation such as a period or an exclamation in the architecture. They may serve as transitional or connective devices. They may be used as qualifying adjectives or adverbs in the architectural statement.

On these two pages are examples of how one Wright-trained architect, William Bernoudy, has handled art possessions in his own home.

Modern paintings, a portion of the Bernoudy collection of art, are displayed on cloth-covered panels, a part of built-in book shelf and storage unit in living room. Panels slide for access to books and to make it possible to rearrange background for a different selection and grouping of pictures. The placing of large painting, without a frame on fireplace wall, makes it seem part of wall. Small paintings are shown against foil-covered screen, right.

Chinese fretwork panels are placed against the glass in the doors from living room to terrace. Here they may be seen from both sides. They serve to give a sense of intimacy to the room, doing here what the small-paned windows did for the colonial house. Pattern of panel also softens rigid form of glass opening, acting as a transition between architecture and forms of Nature.

A fragment of Oriental wood carving, has been incorporated into the rail of stair to a lower level. Rail was designed to display carving to advantage, holding it where it can be seen from both sides, and yet making it seem a part of building. Note also how the painting has been placed on the wall without an elaborate and distracting frame and in such a position so that the wall itself acts as a mat for it as prints or water colors are displayed.

The brick piers in foreground have a quality in keeping with the sculpture given to them by the pierced screen wall between.

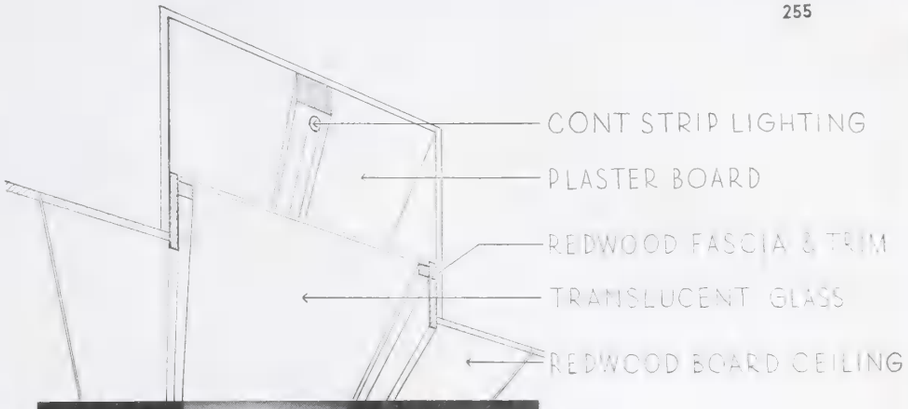
Living room and bedroom have a snug, cozy quality which everyone appreciates. Yet the snugness does not prevent openness and a wide inviting relationship to the outdoors. Wood decks over the doors and windows extend outdoors to become the soffit of the roof overhang, making rooms seem bigger.



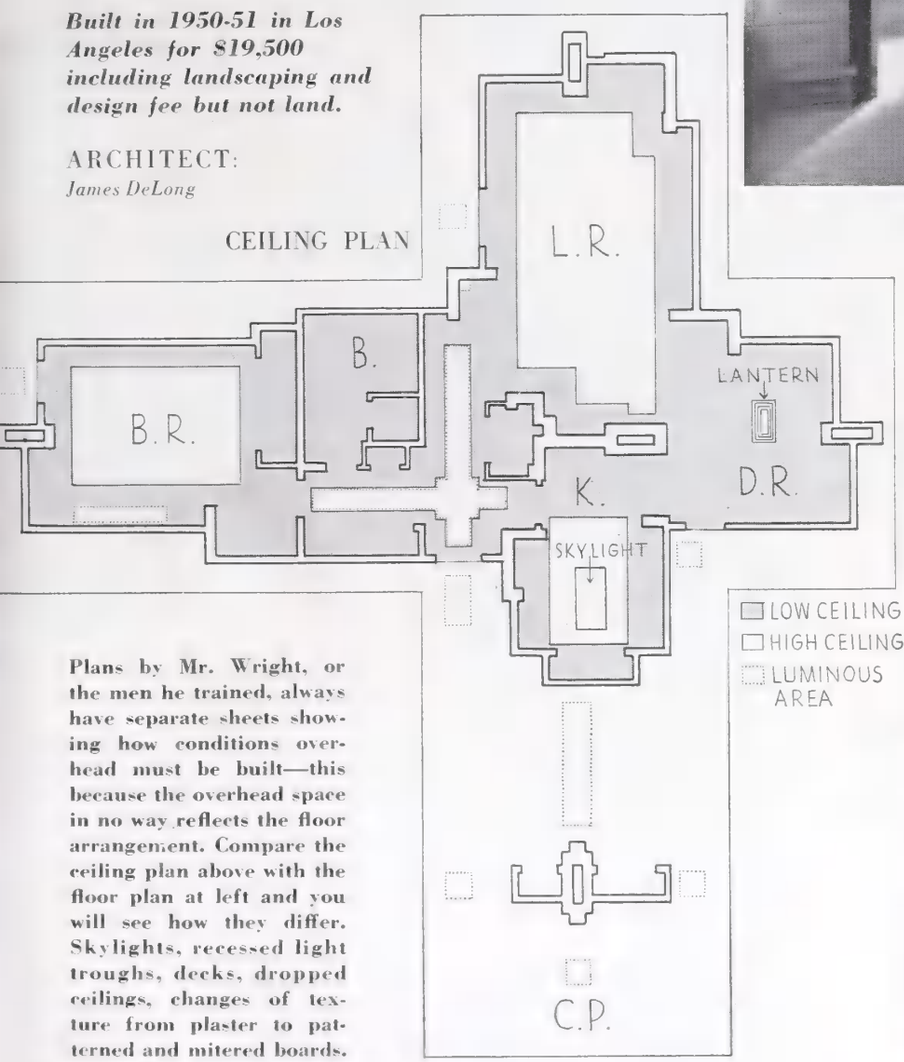
FLOOR PLAN

Here is a perfect plan for a little house for two-person occupancy. All of the rooms have two or more exposures plus good circulation between rooms. The bedroom is nicely sequestered from the rest of the house. Storage is adequate. The small kitchen makes total use of its wall space, yet has ventilation through high clerestory windows. Kitchen is brilliantly lighted from big skylight in which plenty of artifical night lighting is also located. Even the carport has six skylights to step up the low light caused by the sheltering twenty-foot-wide carport.

A Small House can have a Big Presence

● This little house, of only 1,012 square feet, has more distinction and character than is found in most big houses. Though modest in its furnishings, it has a quality of calm, dignified assurance.

This has been arrived at by two methods. The floor plan is excellent, with all the necessities more than adequately provided for. But it is the handling of the space overhead that is the real secret to its character. The ceiling plan below shows the tip-off. Skylight, recessed lighting, decks, two ceiling levels, strips of windows at the ceiling line add up to an atmosphere quite the opposite of mundane.



Built in 1950-51 in Los Angeles for $19,500 including landscaping and design fee but not land.

ARCHITECT:
James DeLong

Entry hall, seen on front cover, has a real presence, thanks to x-shaped, deeply recessed ceiling lighting. Makes cramped space seem big. Such a device could be done any place where the ceiling does not slope.

CEILING PLAN

Plans by Mr. Wright, or the men he trained, always have separate sheets showing how conditions overhead must be built—this because the overhead space in no way reflects the floor arrangement. Compare the ceiling plan above with the floor plan at left and you will see how they differ. Skylights, recessed light troughs, decks, dropped ceilings, changes of texture from plaster to patterned and mitered boards.

View from living room to dining room shows how plan permits little vistas. But change of ceiling level, which is not a literal reflection of the floor plan, adds considerable interest to space overhead.

Create overhead interest plus a new way to admit light

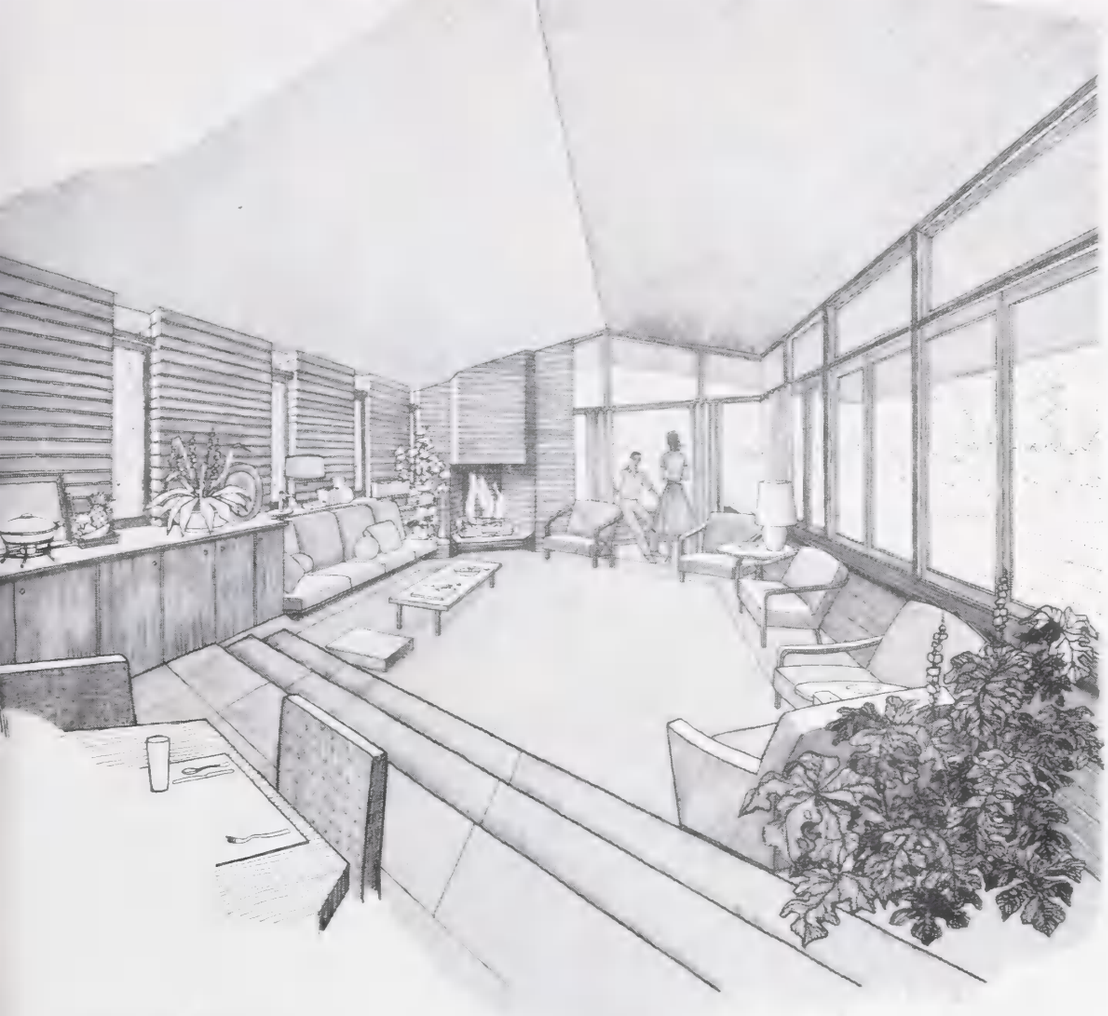
In a guest room of Taliesin the spaciousness of the room is increased by the handling of the ceiling planes. The sloping surface which rises from the lower ceiling above the windows is pierced by a high space over the fireplace. Sunlight admitted here through triangular windows on both sides is thrown across fireplace wall and lights the seating area around the fire.

Exploding the Box to Gain Spaciousness

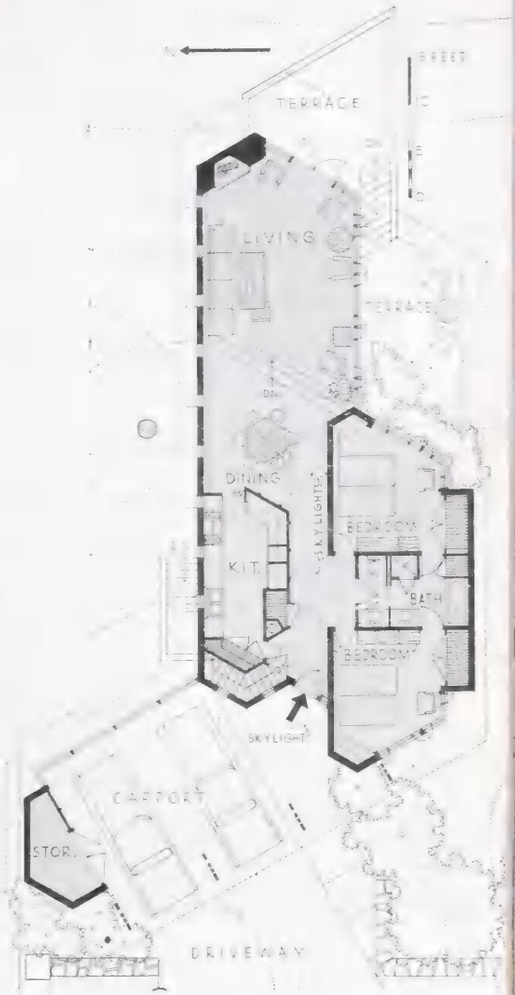
By ELIZABETH GORDON

The visual character of a boxy space is obvious and self-evident. See any corner of it and you know, without looking around, what the rest is. There is no mystery, nothing to intrigue. Six flat planes are not enough to beguile the eye—and though views through windows and doors (or through whole walls of glass) can help a great deal, they give less than the possible maximum. Covering these planes with rich fabrics and colors may help to give interest of a kind, but such appliqué still surfaces no more than six planes.

Frank Lloyd Wright has been demonstrating for the last 60 years that interior space can be much richer and more interesting than a meager box with holes punched at intervals to let in light and air. He discovered and developed a series of design devices, which he used again and again to avoid the box. They were his means of accomplishing his goal of freer and less static space, though they have often been mistaken for ends in themselves.



The following are some of the methods he used to accomplish his goal. Obviously not all were used in one building, nor are they hard and fast rules, but they do give the general drift of the means he used.



Make the overhead (be it roof or ceiling) interesting, but always as a sheltering element. It may be several-leveled and intricate, having (Please turn to page 258)

How diagonals can make space visually larger

This floor plan illustrates how Wrightian designing took the curse off a narrow 50-foot lot by a clever use of diagonals and glass. Scheme permits unbroken vistas as long as 83 feet and 64 feet, a remarkable achievement. In addition, privacy from nearby neighbors was accomplished. Fences at rear and on sidelines were designed to look like walls, so the eye reads them optically as walls of the house. Rooms wrap around an enclosed interior garden, and all but one look into this. Since nearly all rooms look through this inner garden to see other rooms, it confuses what is indoors and outdoors, aiding the illusion that the fences are the walls of the house. This house was published in House Beautiful for April 1955. Architect was Aaron Green of the West Coast office of Taliesin Associates.

The obtuse angle gives an increased sense of openness and a greater sense of freedom

One is less confined by the outward opening quality of the obtuse angle, just as one is more confined by the acute angle. The wider angle, as well as the circular arc, suggest a freer and easier sense of movement and make it possible to achieve a plan which is less rigid in form and more relaxed and more spacious. This house, now under construction for Tom MacNider in Mason City, Iowa, was designed by Curtis Besinger, architect.

Destruction of planes that confine

Even glass can be a confining plane! Karl Kamrath, architect, in designing his own home, used a device that Frank Lloyd Wright developed to make glass seem less an enclosure, less a barrier. Glass wall is developed as a zigzag. Ceiling is patterned to follow, but is developed further to make squares. Squares repeat outside as pools. All this diminishes the eye's noticing of the barrier.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Wright's approach to architecture can never be reduced to rules, for that can only produce clichés. Yet he had general lines of thinking which he followed. But he did not hesitate to deviate from them. This is, in general, "the drift."

overlapping planes and providing dark cave-like areas for retreat when your thoughts are dark. Let there be lofty, bright, and sunny places for the times when you are sure and serene—or in an optimistic and expansive mood. This may be a simple roof that snuggles close to the earth on one side and soars toward the sky on the other.

Bring light in by other means than holes punched repetitiously in flat walls. Let openings for light be at places where elements of the structure meet, so light is a natural by-product of the meeting. When you punch a hole in a wall, it makes the wall more wall-like and establishes more clearly and firmly that it is a barrier. Of course there are times when you want a wall to seem like a barrier, so that is the time to punch the holes. Think of the roof as an umbrella against the sun, which can be pierced at reasonable junctures to let shafts of light and sun march across the fluid interior space below.

Let one interior space borrow visually from other contiguous spaces, through wide openings, and by the use of continuous floor levels and the use of the same materials. Try to make one plastic, continuous entity out of the space. There are a number of ways to do this. Eliminate the cover strips (such as moldings and thresholds) that customarily cover joints and are signals that one space has ended and another begun. Eliminating these helps the bigger elements to seem for more. The goal is not plainness, but flowing continuity.

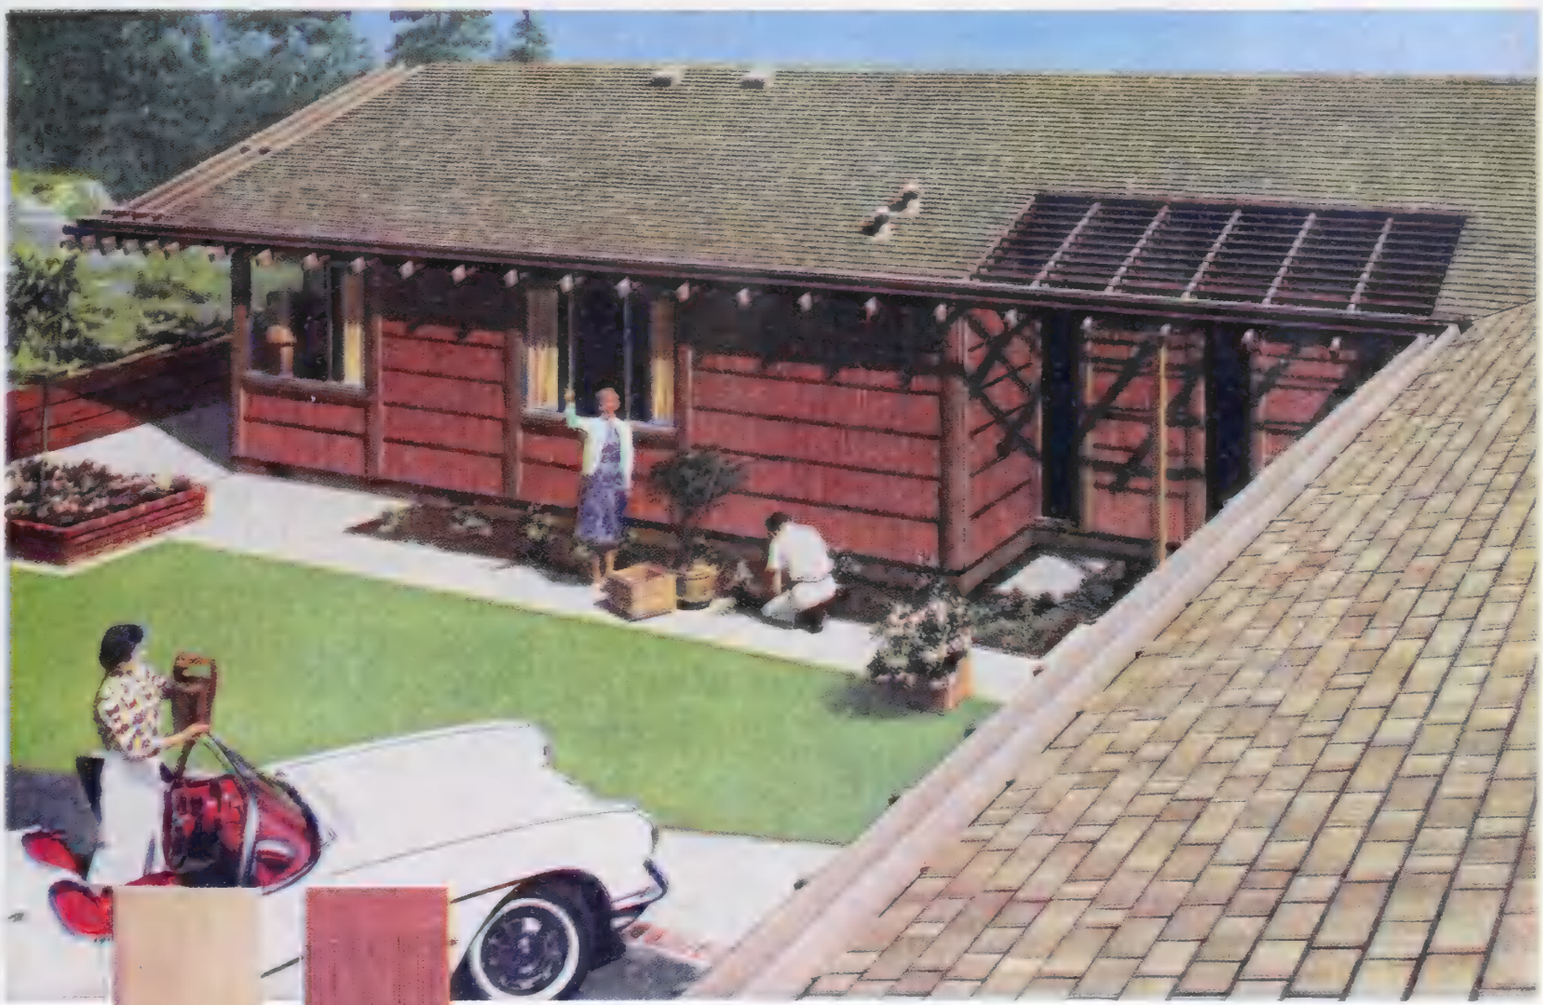
Avoid right-angle corners both horizontally and vertically. Instead, use obliques, diagonals, diamonds, circles or arcs. Let curved space flow out of curved space. Or let part of a hexagon flow out of a full hexagon.

Since the planning should be done so it is not obvious, easily grasped and boring, avoid symmetry, for it defines the space and fixes it even before it is seen. Having no axis produces a freer feeling and gives a repose you cannot achieve when you have symmetry. Put the "center of interest" off side—not on center. This has to be done in a sensible and genuine manner, and must not be done with "tricky effects" or the repose and freedom will be lost. Even with the asymmetric plan, do not make it complete in itself, but make it ask the mind to finish what cannot be seen.

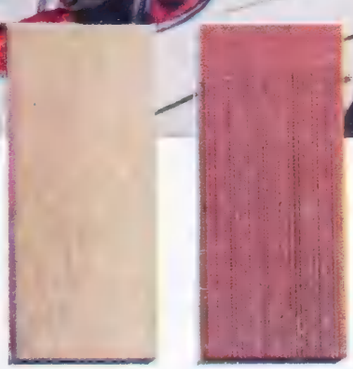
The mind is clever at finishing what is not totally revealed—in fact, it finds such challenge enchanting. There are many ways to enclose and protect without the design's revealing itself all at once.

Limit the number of materials used: the fewer the better. Fewer make the space one big ensemble, instead of a hodgepodge. Thus the total is made bigger. One material should dominate and take the center of the stage; all the others should be subordinate.

Since the goal is to not define the structure as a barrier, let part of the structure extend out into the landscape beyond the real enclosure. You can do this with a wall or part of a wall, or with ground paving. This extends the sense of the enclosure and destroys the barrier, even when glass is the only barrier. The inside space will be richer because it "takes in" (without bringing in) the outdoors. This is different from framing the view of outdoors. It makes the structure fraternize with Nature. It is better to do this in several stages of transition and avoid any abrupt change between inside and outside. All kinds of gradations are possible: secluded terraces, walks of the same material as the structure, low walls continuing the structure and made of the same materials. The goal is to make partners of man and Nature, rather than to make man the master of Nature, setting himself above and apart.



(EDITOR'S NOTE: This is a basic difference between the attitude of the Bauhaus and the Wrightian way. The Bauhaus way is to set the house into the landscape with no relation to it, as one might exhibit an object in a museum, out of any context.)



This attitude (how house shall relate to Nature) is basic to exploding the box. The Wrightian way is to take visually into the structure as much of Nature as can agreeably be seen. Yet the Wrightian way is the opposite of rustic. It means living in a cultivated and cultured way—not camping. Rather it means that, since the structure is not deceitful but is honest in all its parts and materials, it can be set beside Nature without either "showing up" the other.

Above all, make certain it's CEDAR

What wonderful assurance it is to know your home has been designed to withstand changes in taste as well as changes in weather. Three thick layers of cedar stand between you and the elements when your roof is built with cedar shingles. And it will actually grow more handsome as the shingles mellow with the years! On the walls, grooved cedar shakes add importance to your home while making it snug and secure. Cedar shakes provide needed texture . . . create dramatic horizontal shadow-lines . . . and come in a tasteful array of factory-applied colors. These are the reasons the better builders in your community, above all, make certain it's cedar!

BUTCHER'S WAX

Why it's worth going a little out of your way to find

Our name is Butcher. We've been making wax products in Boston for over 75 years. Architects and decorators like them.

We think you will, too. But you may have to make an extra shopping stop to find them. That's because we think the people best qualified to sell them are in hardware, paint, linoleum and department stores.

Butcher's Waxes are everything we say they are. They won't disappoint you. And that's a promise.

BUTCHER'S SELF-POLISHING. True wax in liquid form. Gives floors a deep luster that lasts . . . for up to two full months. Scuffs but doesn't scratch. And scuffs buff right out. Waterproof. Washable. Spills wipe up without spotting.

PASTE WAXES. If you don't mind the work of a paste wax or if you own an electric polisher, these are very satisfying. A light coat twice a year — without pre-washing — makes floors glow. Many kinds of floors — wood, linoleum, vinyl and cork. Excellent, too, for fine furniture and all woodwork. Boston Polish for regular use. White Diamond for light woods and surfaces.

FLO-PASTE pours like a liquid. Polishes like paste. It's a liquid paste wax. You get a paste wax polish without the work. Just pour and spread. It's a cleaner, too. No need to scrub before. And Flo-Paste lasts almost as long as paste.

Studying at Taliesin means more than architectural study. It means experience in worldly relations. Here is Mrs. Wright with boys from 8 countries so they will be able to more fully exploit the craft than even the craftsmen themselves. They were to learn about the outdoor life of Nature: farming, plant and animal growth, erosion, the way of the seasons with all living things. They experience and participate in the running of a household in a beautiful way. For the operation of the Taliesin household in a beautiful manner was a necessity to Mr. and Mrs. Wright. (But more about this side of things in the story on page 232 entitled "Wright's Way with Little Things.")

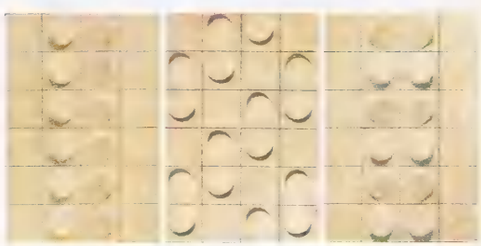
But beyond and above architecture, Taliesin students were trained in the proper value of things, and how to work more efficiently for a purpose. I have known personally about ten Taliesin graduates, plus the fifteen who are now the permanent staff and who will carry on the architectural practice. Without exception, these people know the big truth; it is more rewarding to give more than is received, in monetary terms, as Wright did himself. Each has learned to put himself into a project, whether it is building a chicken coop or a cathedral, giving a dance performance, or painting a mural.

Life and training at Taliesin was also an experience in world-wide personal relationships, for usually there were students from eight to ten countries, all working toward one common interest—the grasp of Wrightian architectural principles.

It could well be that, in the long view, the results of the Taliesin training system will be Frank Lloyd Wright's greatest legacy. For, despite accusations to the contrary, a respectable number of the architects he trained and sent into the world have grasped what he was driving at, and examples of their work dominate this issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL.

For Wright was an innovator of design the like of which has not been known in the history of Western civilization. His structural innovations were so numerous and his new ways of enclosing space so fresh and different that men of small ability could not be expected to grasp the totality of what he pioneered.

A few architects, who did not even study or work with Wright, have grasped his principles and are practicing them within the general outlines of his philosophy. This is reward indeed, for many great innovators in other fields (such as medicine, aviation, and music) have died without the comfort of knowing they were to be understood after their death.



The forms Wright created during his 70 years of work have been imitated by many, and a great deal of his architectural grammar has been totally absorbed into architectural practice—so totally that many young designers, who haven't paid attention to architectural history, don't even know where the details they use originated.

But the thing most architects have not mastered is the totality of his designing. Wright never separated aesthetics from engineering, but used them as one entity. The imitators tend to separate them, which results either in aesthetic effects without structural soundness or ponderous engineering without any poetic delight.

WRIGHT'S starting point in all designing was to create a pleasing interior atmosphere out of the structural systems and materials chosen to be used. This does not mean he neglected the exterior. He proved again and again that by developing a delightful and rewarding interior space (meaning its mood, scale, sources of light, textures, etc.). Thus its structural enclosure became likewise a pleasing and interesting exterior. Both happened at once.

He likened this creative process to the planting of a seed that has all the elements of its future form in it, and as it grows it unfolds according to its inherent nature. He again and again remarked on how exciting it was to see the elevations evolve naturally, almost of their own accord, out of the chosen structural system.

For this kind of designing he used the word "organic," meaning to grow out of the nature of the thing. He also called it "natural architecture," one that is integral to the nature of the materials and their assemblage, to the site, to the climate, and to the life of the inhabitants.

To say it all another way: To Wright, architecture was never an outside form that contained space. Rather it was the space within that was the true architectural reality. The exterior should be merely an expression of it.

Some have tried to explain this by saying it is designing from the "inside out," but this is not a deep enough explanation of the Wrightian way. It does not cover the third dimensional quality in Wright's way of designing. For you can design from the inside out and yet be working and thinking only in flat planes—walls, floors, ceiling—which results in the same old boxy rooms. Wright's kind of space was not the product of two-dimensional planes. It was three dimensional from its very inception, and the space resulting would be much more complex and varied than a box with only six planes. Boxy rooms have one width, one length, and one height. Wright's rooms have many more than these three standard dimensions.

Very little architectural designing has been done, throughout history, out of such principles. The ancient cathedrals, such as Chartres had this kind of interior space, but abodes never had it. Yet to live daily in a rich and interesting kind of space-atmosphere can be very rewarding and inspiring. Whether people are fully conscious of this or not, they actually derive countenance and sustenance from the atmosphere of the things they live in and with. To live within a Wrightian type of space is a very different kind of experience from living within a boxy space.

SOME of Wright's detractors accuse him of not creating a "style," saying that were he really great he would have set a style that others could copy.

This is just what Wright did not want to do. He was against all "styles," for he believed that by the time you could formalize a manner of designing with rules, the life had died out of it. He felt that the design evolved from the solving of the problem, and that since every building problem is different no two solutions could be alike—and be solutions. Therefore, to work within a style was to cramp and limit your solution. To be good architecture a building cannot be tagged with a style label. If it can be labeled with a style name, there is something the matter with it.

He believed that "art can be no restatement"—any kind of art, whether music or poetry or painting. Obviously buildings worthy of the word "architecture" could be no restatement of others as they must be when the design grammar of an established style is applied.

He scoffed at the followers of the Rationalist School because their buildings were not rational. He repeatedly pointed out that the work of the Functionalists was anything but functional. He regarded both schools of thought as tradition-bound as any Period styles.

Wright might be called "The Lone Ranger" in American architecture. (It was no coincidence that one of his favorite movies was the classic western "High Noon.") He was a fierce critic of what he considered dangerous, and, unlike many critics, he always had a solution for what he was criticizing. He was a Positivist, in times of negativism.

Baking for breakfast

The easy way to have heavenly brioche, coffee cake, or cinnamon buns—all from one basic dough made the night before

By FANNIE KLINKENBERG

■ Piping hot brioche with your breakfast coffee—why not? Because it's a yeast bread, you probably think it is time-consuming and difficult. But baking with yeast can be easy, if you use a dough that can be made up the day before and kept overnight in the refrigerator. This is especially true of brioche that can be refrigerated up to four days because the dough contains enough sugar and salt to extend the action of the yeast cells.

After the brioche dough has spent twelve hours in the refrigerator, you can save time by shaping the brioche in the afternoon and refrigerating them overnight in tins or muffin pans. The next morning all you have to do is remove the pan from the refrigerator, let the brioche rise, and then bake them.

For variety, coffee cake or cinnamon buns can be made by adding a few spices and flavorings to the basic dough.

The following recipe yields 36 brioche, or 12 brioche, 12 cinnamon buns, and 1 coffee cake (9 x 7).

French Brioche

(Basic Recipe)

1½ cups scalded, not boiled, milk
1 cup (2 sticks) butter, softened
¾ cup sugar
2 teaspoons salt
3 packages active dry yeast
½ cup lukewarm water
Grated rind of 1½ lemons
About 8½ cups sifted, all-purpose flour
5 whole eggs, beaten
4 egg yolks, beaten

The day before: In a large bowl stir hot milk, softened butter, sugar, and salt until blended. Let cool.

In a small bowl sprinkle yeast on lukewarm water; stir and let dissolve (about 10 minutes).

To cooled milk mixture add dissolved yeast, lemon rind, and half of the flour. Beat with heavy spoon or electric mixer.

Stir in beaten eggs and yolks; add remaining flour gradually, beating well after each addition, until dough is light and bubbly.

Cover bowl tightly with wax paper which has been brushed with vegetable oil. Top with damp cloth and let rise in warm place (about 85° F.) until more than doubled in bulk (about 2 hours).

Stir down, beat thoroughly, and cover again with wax paper and damp cloth. Store in refrigerator overnight. The dough will come up quickly before it is chilled. You may have to punch it down twice before you leave it for the night.

Note: A dough as rich and soft as this is not kneaded. Thorough mixing is essential, as well as at least 12 hours of cold "repose" in the refrigerator to properly ripen.

To save time in the morning, brush brioche tins (3½″), or muffin pan (2¾″ x 1¼″) with shortening, cover and set aside.

The next morning: Combine 1 egg white with 1 tablespoon sugar; stir to dissolve sugar. Set aside for brush-over before baking.

Turn out soft dough on floured board; cut it into 3 equal pieces. Allow only 1 piece for 12 brioche; return the others to refrigerator.

Divide dough into two pieces, one three-fourths its weight or size, and the other fourth. Form larger piece into 12-inch roll. Cut roll in 12 equal pieces. Shape smooth balls, put them into the prepared brioche or muffin tins.

Form smaller piece into 12-inch roll. Cut 12 equal pieces, shape smooth balls. Make deep indentation in center of each large ball; dampen with cold water and press a small ball into each indentation.

For quick raising: Cover with clean cloth and set pan in unheated oven. Place large pan of very hot water on rack beneath it. Let rise about 30 minutes. Remove pans from oven, set it at 375° F., heat for 10 minutes. Brush with egg-white-sugar; bake 30 minutes.

Quick Coffee Cake

The night before: Brush 9 x 7 x 2 baking pan (or 8 x 8 x 2) with vegetable shortening. Mix together:

½ cup sugar
1½ teaspoons cinnamon
½ cup (2 oz.) almonds, slivered

Set out ½ cup (1 stick) butter to soften to spreading consistency. Cover all and set aside for morning.

The next morning: Use only half of remaining dough; keep other half in refrigerator.

Roll out dough into an oblong about 15″ x 9″. Brush dough with two-thirds of the soft butter. Sprinkle center third of rolled dough, crosswise, with one-third of the cinnamon-sugar almond mix. Fold one-third of dough over center third. Sprinkle folded third with half of remaining sugar mix. Fold last third of dough over the two layers. Lift and ease it into the pan. Spread top with soft butter and cinnamon-sugar-almonds.

Cover and let rise in unheated oven over very hot water, about 35 minutes. Remove and heat oven to 350° F. (about 10 minutes). Bake for 25 to 30 minutes.

Cinnamon Buns

The night before: Brush muffin pan (¾″ x 1¼″) with vegetable shortening. Mix together:

1 cup sugar
1½ teaspoons cinnamon
½ cup raisins

Cover all and set aside in a bowl.

The next morning: Melt ¼ cup (½ stick) butter. Roll out the last of the dough into a square about 12″ x 12″. Brush dough with melted butter and sprinkle with sugar-raisin mixture. Roll up as for jelly roll. Cut roll into 12 equal pieces and place cut side up into muffin pan. Cover and let rise in unheated oven over very hot water for 30 minutes. Remove and heat oven to 350° F. Bake for about 30 minutes. Spread hot buns with plain icing.

with a touch of greatness

THE Chinese say that peas were first discovered by their emperor, Shen Nung, 5000 years ago.

Perhaps. But even so, to the French goes the credit for developing greatness in peas. Only recently has the flavor of the famed petits pois been rivaled by some little peas now being grown on choice American acres.

These little peas are very young and very tender. Quite different from those you usually get to taste outside of France. They're little peas with a touch of greatness.

Their exceptional flavor is no accident. Their lineage is longer than that of any line of kings. Their seed has evolved through hundreds of careful breedings and cross-breedings. And it's planted in special soils in the perfect latitude for peas.

Every growing day the young pea plants are tended with extraordinary care. Very shortly the little peas they bear achieve their moment of supreme flavor, whereupon they're swiftly picked and packed in tins for you to shelve and eat at your pleasure.

Their name is Le Sueur Brand peas. Better grocers everywhere try to keep a supply on hand. May we suggest that you order several tins soon? They're as good as gold in your pantry.

a challenge. Some will be content to struggle upward attempting to follow the path of his explorations, happy to follow the trail which he has already marked out. Others, perhaps more adventuresome and independent, will strike off on their own to break new trails and to attempt to scale new heights.

To the artistic avant-garde of the mid-20th Century, Frank Lloyd Wright was, is, and will continue to be an impertinence. To them he was acceptable as one of the grandfathers of "modern" architecture, a part of the American Architectural triumvirate of the 19th Century—Richardson, Sullivan, and Wright—to whom all homage ar respect was due for their outstan ing contributions to the new sty of architecture. To this avan garde, with their desire to be th arbiters of taste, he continual proved annoying. He received the homage with far less esteem tha they would have desired. He r fused to play the role of the hoar historic figure they assigned hi And he refused to sit quietly the niche assigned to him in the hall of fame. Wright's continuin production of new forms was constant threat to their conce of a "Modern Style." whi they hoped to establish. Since his later work was not consistent in form with his earlier work, from which their style was supposedly, in part, derived, it threatened to undermine the assumed foundation of their work.

Some advocates of the "new style" were often critical of Frank Lloyd Wright because he never paused in his creative search to perfect any of his forms, to polish them into a style with an established dogma and a technique that could be taught and copied. Such criticism demonstrates a lack of understanding of the philosophy that motivated his work. It was a philosophy that stemmed directly from his mentor, Louis Sullivan, to whom he referred as "Lieber Meister," who had taught him "every problem contains and suggests its own solution. Don't waste time looking anywhere else for it. In this mental attitude, in this mood of understanding, lies the technical beginning of the art of expression."

It was never his purpose to create a style: he was an enemy of establishment and fixation. He preferred the sense of things as fluid and changing. It was not Wright's intention to create a form imposed upon life from the outside. His forms had to have an organic relation to the architectural problem at hand.

He was interested in the solution of individual and particular problems growing out of a way of building, according to the nature of the site, according to the nature of the materials, and according to the life purpose to be served.

This meant to him not an established and dogmatic style, but instead endless variations of style—as individual character—proceeding from the same source that produced endless variation in building sites, and materials with which to build.

He agreed with the Bible: "The letter killeth, the spirit giveth life." So how could architecture be formalized into "A Style"?

To some men, he was a man who refused to enter and to become a part of the 20th Century. Perhaps, in the long view of history, this attitude may have a different interpretation. The 20th Century is still very much in a state of becoming—on its way to something not yet clearly foreseen. It is in a process of change and development that is giving birth to the 21st Century. The transformation of the physical environment of a century is a slow process. Perhaps the creative process, partly set in motion and given its initial impulse by the force of his catalytic mind, has not yet approached its final form—the work of art he envisioned in his general concepts of how we might live.

Perhaps these new super-highways and limited-access roads, the satellite shopping centers, the new general offices and research centers surrounded by landscaped parks and far removed from the centers of present cities, are the first intimations of a new pattern for living being brought about by the use of the auto and more recent developments in electronics and nuclear power, which Wright predicted in Broadacre City.

To many critics of architecture, and of his work in particular, Frank Lloyd Wright was a source of embarrassment and a disturbing and provocative threat to their positions as authorities. Time, in too many instances, had proven the critics wrong and Wright right.

To those fortunate people who have known the experience of living, working, or worshiping in a building designed by him, whose number constantly increased during his lifetime and will continue to increase even though his hand is stilled, Frank Lloyd Wright was more than any one of the previously mentioned qualities—or their sum total. He added depth and significance to their lives. He provided them with an environment that heightened the quality of their life, raising it to a level they may have anticipated but one they had never experienced in its totality. The qualities of this environment, though intangible, were strongly felt. His buildings have within them a vital sense of serenity and repose, a strong sense of integrity, and a vigorous sense of the freedom and the individual dignity of man. All of these qualities are communicated to the people who occupy these buildings in much the same manner that great music or poetry speaks to the heart and soul of man.

To all of us, whoever we may be, Frank Lloyd Wright left a legacy, the magnitude of which is still unknown and the limits of which are still unexplored. Ours is a heritage that we are only beginning to realize. It is difficult for us to believe that one individual could be so productive in one lifetime, even though he did enjoy nearly ninety full and rich years upon this earth. His architectural practice alone encompassed seventy years.

It includes nearly one thousand homes ranging in size from mansion to cottage and in location from coast to coast. His own homes in Wisconsin and Arizona, considered to be the two most beautiful homes in America, are among these.

Wright's work also includes many major buildings, other than homes, that were the product of his fertile mind. All of them are architectural landmarks of prime importance: the Imperial Hotel in Tokyo, Japan; the offices for the Johnson Wax Company in Racine, Wisconsin; the office building for the H.C. Price Company in Bartlesville, Oklahoma; the museum for the Solomon Guggenheim Foundation in New York City; the synagogue for the Beth Sholom Congregation in Elkins Park, Pennsylvania; and other buildings now in the process of construction but yet to be completed.

It includes his voluminous writing, consisting of numerous books and magazine articles. Among these is his Autobiography, in itself a work of art.

It includes the innumerable minds that he has touched and stimulated in his thousands of lecture appearances and in his radio and television interviews.

It includes the great treasure of projects that for one reason or another were never built: many were commissioned by patrons who did not intend to build; others were doomed by economic conditions, such as the crash of 1929; and still others were simply ideas that he, himself, in the flood of his creativity, felt the urge to put on paper as a matter of record. All of this treasure, in safekeeping at Taliesin, lies waiting only for a present or a future generation who will realize the riches that might be theirs.

It includes his numerous ideas and principles as they were expressed in any one of the several media of communication in which he was versed: building, drawing, writing, or speaking.

It would include the many architects, who, although they did not work directly with him, were strongly influenced by his work and his ideas.

Important, too, are the many men whom he trained and who had the privilege of working directly with him. The roster, international in character, lists not only the names of those who studied under his guidance in the Taliesin Fellowship since 1932, but the names of those who worked with him in his Oak Park Studio in Chicago, in the early phase of his career, and those who came later to work with him at Taliesin before the establishment of the Fellowship.

It includes the group of men who were working with him at Taliesin at the time of his death and who have associated themselves to complete the work in progress and to continue the practice of architecture now and in the future.

And it includes the Taliesin Fellowship established in 1932, when, because of the depression, Wright's architectural practice was at a low ebb. At its inception the Fellowship was an experiment in education, based upon a need for development of the whole person of a man with the belief that nothing less than a whole man could produce worthy architecture. Its method was to immerse the potential architect in a life devoted to architecture, in which he would live and learn by experience in actual construction and in the practice of architecture rather than by dabbling his fingers theoretically in the shallows of architecture. It was an attempt to train the beginner by apprenticeship in his field rather than through the vicarious information of book-learning.

At the time of his death the Fellowship was well established and no longer an experiment. Working with him was his wife, whose ideas and encouragement were a vital and essential ingredient from the beginning of the Fellowship. With the resurgence of his architectural practice she assumed an increasing responsibility in the life and guidance of the Taliesin Fellowship.

Working with her, and with Wright, was a strong core of men and women, several of whom had worked with him from the first days of the Fellowship, and who, because of their proven abilities and understanding of his principles, were given responsibilities both in the architectural projects and in the training of younger and less experienced men.

As a vigorous and continuing extension of his work and ideas, the Fellowship method will assume an increasing importance as a contribution not only to architecture but also to the education of man in a more significant manner.

It would be impossible to assess fully, in this one issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, the many-sided legacy that Frank Lloyd Wright has left to us. The work of great creative spirits contains an inexhaustible richness and depth which, no matter how long studied, continues to offer new discoveries and fresh significance. Shakespeare remains as fresh and vital to us today as he was to the Elizabethan audiences, though perhaps in a different way. Bach and Beethoven continue to move us with their depth and profundity.

THE great creative spirits have left their contributions to the cultural riches of this world, to be shared by all who are able to appreciate them. But few of them have left legacies which can be shared by so many. And few men have left behind them a world so marked, so changed, and so enriched as did Frank Lloyd Wright.

In the November, 1955 issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL devoted exclusively to his work, it was possible to show only a minute fragment of his work and to sketch, only in outline, his contributions to the beauty of American life.

He has, himself, in his book, A Testament summarized and illustrated the principles that guided the creation of his work. These have also appeared in a book, An American Architecture, a collection of his principal ideas edited by Edgar Kaufmann. Both books were published by the Horizon Press.

The principles he practiced and preached so forcefully during his long and vital career are so basic to the beauty of human life that they should not be allowed to fall into disuse. A civilization that grows increasingly ugly, destroying its natural heritage of beauty at a frightening pace, has need for an even wider recognition and practice of these principles.

Many of his innovations are now so much a part of the American scene and our accepted way of living that it is difficult to imagine they once did not exist. Critics of his work are in danger of finding themselves in the same position as that of the woman who criticized Shakespeare, saying he couldn't have been so great because his plays were filled with quotations.

So infinite and intense are the sparks cast off by this great mind that an architect of today or tomorrow, seizing on any one of them, could fan it into an accomplishment worthy of a life's work. Each of his buildings contained enough ideas to constitute production sufficient for an average man's entire career.

We cannot attempt to describe completely the forms that these ideas have produced, and will not predict what forms they will produce in the future. Even should all his buildings be destroyed, Wright's ideas will persist in his writing and in the minds of men. Ideas have a particular vitality not subject to material destruction. Phoenix-like, they have the quality of springing from death and destruction to life in new dimensions.

Although he did regret the disappearance of portions of his work, Frank Lloyd Wright was never defeated by it, believing as he did that "the law of organic change is the only thing that mankind can know as beneficent or as actual! We can only know that all things are in process of flowing in some continuous state of becoming." He was quite willing to change, and perhaps to destroy his own work when he saw an opportunity or the need for improvement in it.

But he was opposed to change for the mere sake of change or novelty—or when change was destructive of human values. And many of the changes he saw taking place in the world were destructive of the human values he cherished. These changes he opposed with an evangelic fury.

They meant to him the de-personalization of man, the shift of emphasis from man as an individual and the center of the world to men as units, as machines in the collective aggregate of society. With this change in scale from the small unit of the individual to the larger and impersonal mass of society, he foresaw the danger of man's losing his own sense of dignity and importance, his own sense of significance in the scheme of things, as he has already done in many parts of the world.

If the whole life and work of Frank Lloyd Wright may be said to have had one objective, it would have been the defense and promulgation of that which is individual. His weapons were buildings. His means were words. His life was guided and shaped by the inner discipline of a great ideal and that ideal, although manifested in many ways, could be represented by the one word, Integrity.

This is a constantly recurring theme in his writing and in his building. "What is needed most in architecture today is the very thing that is needed in life—Integrity. Just as it is in a human being, so integrity is the deepest quality in a building . . . In speaking of integrity in architecture, I mean much the same thing that you would mean were you speaking of an individual. Integrity is not something to be put on and taken off like a garment. Integrity is a quality within and of man himself. So it is in a building. It cannot be changed by another person or by the exterior pressures of any outward circumstances; integrity cannot change except from within because it is that in you which is you—and due to which you will try to live your life (as you would build your building) in the best possible way. To build a man or building from within is always difficult to do, because deeper is not so easy as shallow."

One indication of his own integrity was the fact that he did not allow himself to be swayed from his own beliefs by the tides of fad and fashion. In an age in which it is the mode to be scientific even if one is not a scientist, and when men are inclined to accept the judgments of machines rather than their own human sensibility, even in areas where human sensibility is the only determinant, he refused to become pseudo-scientific just to appear to be in step and in tune with his age.

In an age that allows commercial values to take precedence over human values, he insisted on remaining true to "old-fashioned" human values. How many of us are aware of the influence that commercialism has had upon art and architecture? Or how much of architecture has been designed, inspired by the contemplation of the return on the dollar. How many buildings are conceived as giant posters? Or as giant packages? How much of the training of young architects has been influenced by the values of typography and industrial design?

Integrity was the essential quality of architecture as he conceived it: "We are trying to bring integrity into building. If we succeed, we will have done a great service to our moral nature—the psyche—of our democratic society. Living in a house wherein every-

Desert camp forms grew out of need for shelter which could be quickly built by apprentices; which would not require expensive materials; which would make use of an abundance of hard unworkable stone that was available in great quantities on the site; and which would still be in harmony with desert.

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY EZRA STOLLER

Desert camp idea grew out of belief that an architect should learn by experience in actual construction. Long and cold Wisconsin winters made it difficult to continue construction the year around. Desert climate provided suitable conditions and also gave the young architect the experience of living under different conditions in two different climates.

Fresh design grows out of solving problems

• A part of Frank Lloyd Wright's genius stemmed from his ability to look at a new problem with a fresh eye, and perhaps from his ability to recognize that new problems did exist. From a partial point of view new problems may not appear to exist simply because the viewer is not able to see all of the problem. Lethargic minds are not always willing to admit, even to themselves that new problems exist, that conditions may not be the same. They are quite willing to attempt to transfer a solution that may have worked very well in one situation to another in which it is not at all applicable.

The camp in Arizona designed by Mr. Wright for his family and Fresh forms of shelter were evolved at Taliesin West, not just for the sake of novelty, but because the old forms were inappropriate to this new situation. Light overhead structure of dining area, seen from interior below floats above masonry walls, providing shelter against the elements but maintaining the open "living in the out-of-doors" atmosphere desired.

A room without windows, you might call it, the dining space receives non-glary daylight from the continuous slot between the wall and the roof, the overhead skylight, and the opening in wall which is closed with canvas-covered panels. Canvas panels in side slots can be opened to admit more light if desired. End openings are shaded by roof projection.

the Taliesin Fellowship is an illustration of this particular ability.

The cold, long winters of Wisconsin were not favorable for outdoor construction work the year around. Mr. Wright believed that this work was vital to the training of young architects and so sought a milder winter climate where work could continue. The climate of Arizona was suitable and it also offered a stimulating change of environment and the experience of living in entirely different conditions.

The opportunity to build in a new location was a challenge to his creative mind. The problem was how to provide shelter economically and quickly. Little money was available for building materials. There was a great abundance of unworkable, hard stone strewn over the site, located in the foothills of the mountains above the desert. The students were to do all of the construction work.

Out of these problems, combined with the conditions of the site, he created a place to live—not a house in the usual sense, but a beautiful example of a fresh thought on living.

Changing aspects under varied light conditions were understood and utilized by Frank Lloyd Wright. He added an extra vitality to the space-form of the Johnson Wax Company, seen here in three different light conditions and illustrating this well. Seen, above, in direct daylight the building seems almost solid with a glistening appearance. In silhouette against a low sun its structure and intermediate circular floors are seen clearly through its brilliant and translucent enclosure of glass tubing.

conventional box-shaped rooms makes this goal an impossibility. No amount of tricky effects, changing color schemes, or furniture moving will do more than temporarily relieve the boredom of a plain cell.

Knowing this, Frank Lloyd Wright demonstrated in hundreds of business buildings, churches, and houses, large and small, how to create shelter without this spiritual confinement. He developed poetry for the mind and freedom for the soul out of the 20th-century needs, customs, and building materials.

THIS uplifting atmosphere is almost impossible to capture photographically. Like expressing personality in a portrait, it is elusive. But it is a positive result built into the character of these buildings. To be in and use one of these rooms is like listening to or performing fine music. It is an experience that is ever-refreshing to the mind and fulfilling to the soul.

Wright developed countless subtle ways to bring about this atmosphere. The now-familiar corner window is a simple example. The corners are the defining boundaries, the ever-present reminders of the limits of a room. When the corner itself is replaced by glass or opens to another room, the sense of limitation is removed by an opening where enclosure is most expected.

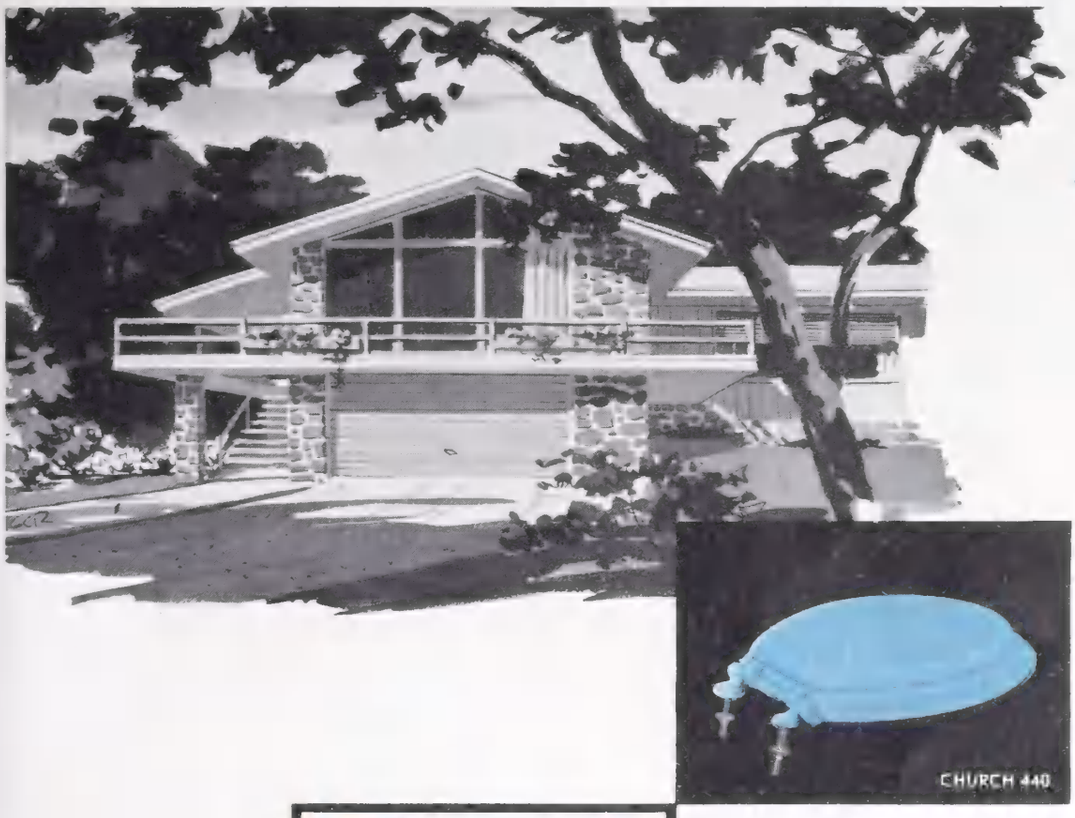
Windows, in the traditional sense, play a small role in Wright's buildings. Aesthetically, punching a hole through a wall is useful only to accentuate the presence and thickness of the barrier. Instead, Wright brought in both light and air by glazing openings where they naturally occur as separations between parts of the structure—the space between two walls, or the opening between two roof planes—even the connection between walls and roof (another corner). Wherever desirable, whole walls of glass from floor to ceiling are used to establish an intimate relationship with the natural scene or garden.

This simple principle—avoid the usual confining perimeter—can be applied in many ways, as you can see on these pages. Yet in these buildings an expansive freedom from confinement is gained without sacrifice of privacy or the comforting sense of shelter and security.

Invariably the overhead structure is designed to give protection without oppression, its form devised to add quality to the space below by establishing cozy intimate areas or expansive soaring spaces.

Often Wright employed astonishing engineering feats to accomplish this aesthetic purpose. But engineering and structural innovations were always a means to a desired goal, never a dominating end in themselves. He taught how to make modern technics serve as a means for beauty rather than restriction.

More than giving form to interior space, he developed it further with texture and ornamentation wherever they would contribute to the desired whole. For he was keenly aware of the necessary, intimate links between man and structure—the gestures that clarify the nature of the materials and structure, and point up the special charm of the total circumstance.



OFTEN the structural system is designed to be an exposed, decorative element contributing rhythmic enrichment. Wood, stone, and brick are all used in ways that let their natural beauty count for the most. Man-made materials like concrete and plastic are molded and patterned to accentuate their plasticity. Tensile steel contributes its lacelike delicacy.

All of these materials are used with skill and insight into their capabilities. But the main point is that they are used as best they can to serve the human occupant. Because these buildings are designed from the inside out, with human movements and sensitivities primarily in mind, the result is a thrilling presence that invites your mind to soar and fills you with a sense of well-being—a real pride and pleasure in your own significance as an individual.

Space, as he shaped it and gave it form, was never rigid, lifeless, or apathetic. Wright endowed space with a fluid and flexible vitality. The quality of his concept might be compared to that quality emanating from the countenance of an alert, intelligent, and imaginative person, as compared with that of a more stolid, dull, and passive person. It has something of that quality which spells the difference between inert matter and living protoplasm invested with a personality or soul.

Space is a creation of the human mind. Each age lives in a kind of space which is, in concept, the creation of its own era. Its concept of space finds expression not only in the art of architecture of an age, but in its social thought, in its

About Gas Heating Comfort!"

I'm starting my "homework" now for the new house we'll be living in next spring. That's why I read the Metalbestos booklet, "What You Should Know About Gas Heating," and found out how much I didn't know!

I didn't realize, for example, that correct gas venting is so important to our gas heating system. If the vent doesn't carry out all the products of gas combustion, water vapor and waste fumes spill back into the home. That's one of the reasons windows steam up and room air smells stale and musty. Not to mention the possible damage to walls and furnishings!

Double-wall Metalbestos gas vents make good sense to me... because they send those waste products completely out-of-doors. When it's time to choose our gas appliances, we're going to make sure of modern gas heat comfort... and include scientific gas vent protection with Metalbestos!

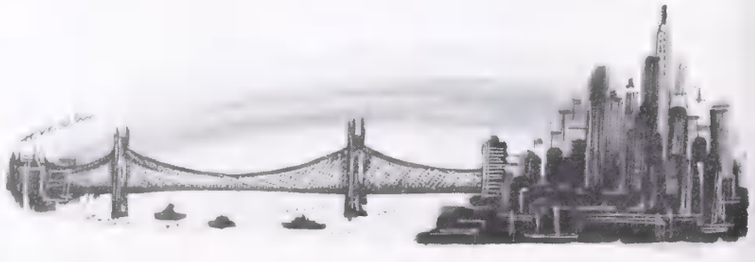
political system, its mathematics, its science, its view of the world, its philosophy, its religion—in the total activity of the mind. The Greeks lived their mental and spiritual life in a kind of space whose form was conceived and expressed by Euclid, by Pythagoras, by Plato, by Aristotle, by Praxiteles, by Phidias, et al. And their buildings were temples like the Parthenon, designed to awe and impress when you looked at them from the outside, to put man in his place before the gods.

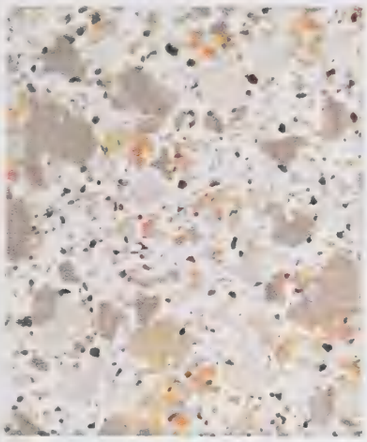
TODAY we are on the threshold of a new kind of space as conceived by the shapers of modern thought. In the realm of mathematics and the physical sciences we are entering into this age. Politically and socially we are engaged in a struggle to determine whether or not we shall enter it. But in architecture, because of the permanence of, and resistance to change in our physical environment, we are, for the most part, living in the kind of space conceived by the Greeks. It is a static, three-dimensional space with limits.

The architectures of the past, many of them conceived in a monumental manner which we now refer to as "classic," having well-defined axes and rigid and symmetrical forms, were all expressive of the social, political, and religious philosophies of their time. They conveyed the idea of power or authority and a well-defined hierarchy or class system. They expressed a social philosophy in which the group or the state took precedence over the individual.

To Frank Lloyd Wright the democratic philosophy of individual freedom, an idea that was new to the world, had never found its expression in architecture. This was a concept that could not be expressed by the symbols and forms of the past. His goal was a medium of expression for this idea and forms significant to it. He found the means of expression in an architecture in which the expressive quality was conveyed by space itself. He conceived an architecture in which the emphasis was upon the space within, more humane in quality, more human in scale, given outward expression.



This can be contrasted with previous architectures in which the emphasis was upon the envelopment of the space. Architecture to him, in this new sense, became similar to music and poetry in that its meaning was not to be found in its tangible elements. Its meaning was to be found "between the lines" and in the continuity of its flow. In place of the rigidly defined forms of the space of the past he envisioned a space having the plastic and changing quality more expressive of life itself and similar in character to an ideally democratic society, which allows each individual to develop according to his own potentials and to rise or fall according to his innate abilities, rather than according to his position in an established regimented order.



Recent developments in structural knowledge and in building materials and techniques are providing the technical means for the realization of this kind of space and expression of freedom.

As discipline or authority in a democratic society is invested, ideally, within each individual in place of being externally imposed, so in Wright's concept of architecture the sense of discipline must also be interior to the form of the building, coming from within to determine outward form.

IN IT there would be no sense of containment or restriction expressive of exterior limitation. In it one lives in the continuity of space, in a harmonious and unified association with his total environment.

"Here coming to light was a sense of building as an organism that had new release for the opportunities of the machine age. This interior conception took architecture entirely away from sculpture, away from painting, and entirely away from architecture as it had been known in the antique. The building now became a creation of interior space in light."

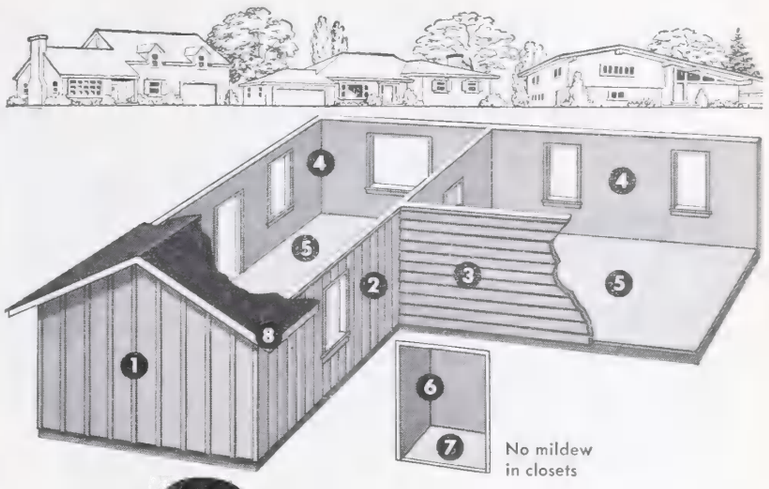
thing is genuine and harmonious, a new sense of freedom gives one a new sense of life." The same idea is stated in his concept of a house: "The Usonian* house aims to be a natural performance. One that is integral to site, to environment, to the life of the inhabitants, integral with the nature of the materials. . . . Into this new integrity, once there, those who live in it will take root and grow."

It appears in its broadest implication in his desire for an integral relationship between life and architecture: "I declare the time is here for architecture to recognize its own nature, to realize the fact that it is out of life, itself, for life as it is now lived, a humane and therefore an intensely human thing. It must again become the most human of all the expressions of human nature. Architecture is a necessary interpretation of such human life as we now know, if we ourselves are to live with individuality and beauty."

It appears again in his desire for integral character in what might be considered the minor and less significant details of a building: "Integral ornament is the developed sense of the building as a whole, or the manifest abstract pattern of structure itself, interpreted. Integral ornament is simply structural pattern made visibly articulate and seen in the building as it is seen articulate in the structure of trees or a lily of the fields."

*Usonia was Samuel Butler's word for the United States.



No element of environment was to escape his desire for unity: "In organic architecture then, it is quite impossible to consider the building as one thing, its furnishings another and its setting and environment still another. The spirit in which these buildings are conceived sees all these together at work as one thing."

It is particularly significant to and expressive of our ideals as a united nation that these great contributions to architecture were made by a man whose life-work consisted largely of dwellings for everyday life and daily existence. They were an idealization of common need.

He did not build the tombs of Pharaohs, the temples of gods, the palaces of royalty, nor the great symbols of governmental power and authority. Believing as he did in freedom, he did not establish a style. It was his strong conviction that as humanity develops there will be less recourse to the standardization called "the styles" and more true style. For the development of humanity is a matter of each individual developing greater creative power of his own, and his style will be his own and come from within himself. A richer variety in unity is, therefore, a rational hope in America.

Wright built houses that were, in effect, temples dedicated to the dignity of each man as an individual. May we always be eternally indebted to him.

shut out light. One's protective shell was also his container in which he was confined.

It was this quality of containment or confinement which Mr. Wright wanted to change. He wanted to change a house from a prison cell to something that gave a sense of freedom. To achieve this he developed a new concept of shelter. He thought of it and its component elements of walls, floors, and roofs as something other than containers of the space in which we live. The roof, as a shelter against the sun and rain, became more expressive of its purpose, and the walls became not defensive devices, but screening elements, used to shape and modulate space, to control light and view—letting them in where wanted, shutting them out when desirable. Space within a house was no longer a collection of separate cells joined by doors and hallways, but something continuous and flowing.

This is a new concept of shelter which varies greatly from our previous concept of shelter as a collection of rooms or separate cells. For this reason it may not be readily understood. In order to explain it we must use the old terminology of "rooms" or "areas" to discuss this new concept of modulated and continuous space.

Storage space (23') lines two walls in master bedroom of the Bartholomew house. Built-in lighting over drawers illuminates both downward and upward to flood the ceiling. Window wall turns corner to eliminate sense of confinement that occurs when corners show.

Space with this new sense of liberation should be lived in to be fully understood and appreciated. The limitations of the printed word and the still photo, unfortunately, are not a substitute for the richness of this experience. But if you will walk with us through this house (and others in this issue which incorporate the same idea of space), with your mind's-eye aided by the photographs, and if you will build up a mental picture of the whole house, your imagination will enable you to see it in its entirety. From this you can gain some appreciation of its particular quality of "liberation within walls."

When approaching the house on the drive near the crest of the hill, you look out over the house. Your first impression is of two low pyramidal roofs connected by a flat roof. From this point of view the house does not rise up before you as if to impress you; it nestles

Wright believed the quality of the structure should not stop at the kitchen door; that the kitchen should be as good and as beautiful as the living room. The Wright student, Aaron Green, who designed this house, delivered nobly on this precept. Above and right is the kitchen storage wall—open and closed. It is of the same quality of cabinetry as all the other woodwork. Since cabinets do not go to ceiling, full dimensions of ceiling are revealed, and so express the shape of the space fully. unobtrusively into the hillside.

In the entrance drive, when you leave your car, you are, in a manner of speaking, already within the house. More exactly, you are in the entrance area defined by the two major elements of the house—the carport at the left and the enclosed portion at the right—and the screen wall that connects them. You descend a few easy steps leading to the covered entranceway. At this point you can see intriguing glimpses of another space beyond, through the foliage-filled slots between the "bent" masonry panels of the screen wall. You are gently directed by the shape of this space toward the entrance door.

When you enter the exciting view, which had previously been tantalizingly withheld from you, is now presented to you in the full sweep of its beauty, complemented and heightened by the architectural elements which are used to give it a setting. You have entered not into an enclosed portion of the

Any real cook knows the watched pot never boils. Yet if you go too far away it may boil over. This kitchen in the Bartholomew house has a couch in a cozy nook at one end of the kitchen toward the laundry. Here Mrs. Bartholomew can drop down to rest. house but into an outdoor room, a wide paved terrace from which the hill drops dramatically away.

Although you are still outside, you are inside the house: the terrace is a section of space given architectural definition as a "room" by those portions of the building adjoining it. Broad steps lead down from the terrace to the hillside leading you visually if not actually toward the valley and the hills beyond, making them seem a part of this setting. At the left a portion of the terrace projects forward as if to put the viewer closer to the view. This vantage point was planned for outdoor dining. Opposite it and near the carport, a portion of the terrace is drawn back under the carport roof to provide a sheltered area for a future outdoor kitchen. At the right of the steps, an enclosed portion of the house projects out under a low sweeping roof to give those inside opportunity to enjoy the view.

Study the plan on page 216; see how the terrace flows around the trunk of the large live oak and under the roof of the enclosed portion of the house to become the dining area. Here, although you are now actually inside you do not sense that you have left the terrace which is a continuation of this enclosed area. In the usually mild weather of this region, with the doors open, these areas are conveniently combined and used for both living and entertaining.

From here you are aware of all of the other major enclosed portions of the house although they may not be completely visible.

The kitchen area is concealed by the island unit against which the dining table is placed. This screening unit is high enough to conceal any untidiness in this work area, but it is also low enough to keep this area from being cut off from the other areas of the house. This makes it a more pleasant work spot, and, more important, it makes it possible for the wife, whose special interest is the fine art of cooking, to continue with the last-minute preparations, those touches that spell the difference between good, adequate cooking and the art of cooking. Yet she is not neglecting her guests.

Near the kitchen is a lounging area with a couch where the housewife may relax while waiting for something to bake or finish cooking, or while waiting for the automatic laundry equipment, also located in this area, to finish a cycle. A convenient lavatory is in the corner near the lounge area.

Except when being used for guests the study is also a continuous part of the central area of the house. In the plan you can see how a person working at the study desk may look through the dining area and to the terrace beyond. If he turns away from the desk, he can see the living room, including the TV corner. Through the living room he can see the valley and hills beyond. Through the windows of the projecting bay of the study he has a similar view of distant landscape and also a view of the nearby hilltop and the approach road. With these long views in nearly all directions a person has the sense of being unconfined: he need not be "shut-in" here except when he wants to be. Then privacy is very easily achieved by shutting the folding door to the dining area and closing the screen in the opening to the living room.

In the living room there is a similar use of openness to secure a sense of liberation within shelter. It, too, is open on three sides. It is closed to the northwest for protection against summer afternoon sun. Set forward on the site in order to take advantage of the more desirable views to the south and southwest, the living room also adapts to the slope of the site by having its floor a few steps lower than the level of other areas in the house. In this forward position the living room also acts as a shield for the terrace against the winds from the north, making it possible to use the terrace for the greater part of the year.

The sense of continuity between inside and out is not limited to the shaping of space in the house. The same materials are used throughout the interior and on the exterior to do away with any differentiation between the inside and the outside. This continuity of materials reinforces the sense of space.

This sense of continuity is also aided by the manner in which materials are used, particularly the glass. Notice how it meets the ceiling without the use of a frame, so that the surface can be seen as carrying through. The glass is also let into a reglet in the masonry walls, so that again, without a frame, there is a continuity of surface, an uninterrupted flow of inside to outside and outside to the inside.

A comparison of the free and open space within this house with the assemblage of boxes, with holes cut into them, in which most of us live, will also help you to understand this new concept of space. "With this concept comes flowering a freedom . . . which architects may now enjoy . . . a true liberation of life and light within walls."

Following is more detailed information on the house designed by Aaron Green for Mrs. and Mrs. M. W. Bartholomew and shown on pages 214 to 217.

A terrace balustrade in one of Frank Lloyd Wright's early houses is made a highly decorative event by the use of repetitive carved stone elements playing with light and space.

A similar interplay of light and space was used by Wm. Bernoudy, architect, in designing this brick and concrete block terrace rail for house of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Scharff.

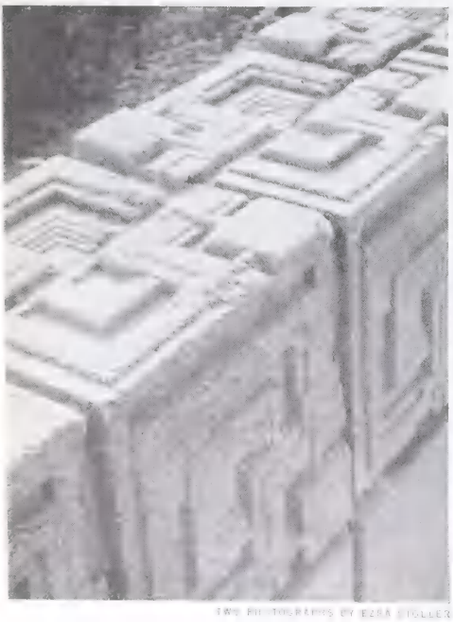
But as plumage is to the bird and blossoms are to the plant, so ornament should be to the building. It should be an integral part of it, having the same origin and the same form characteristics.

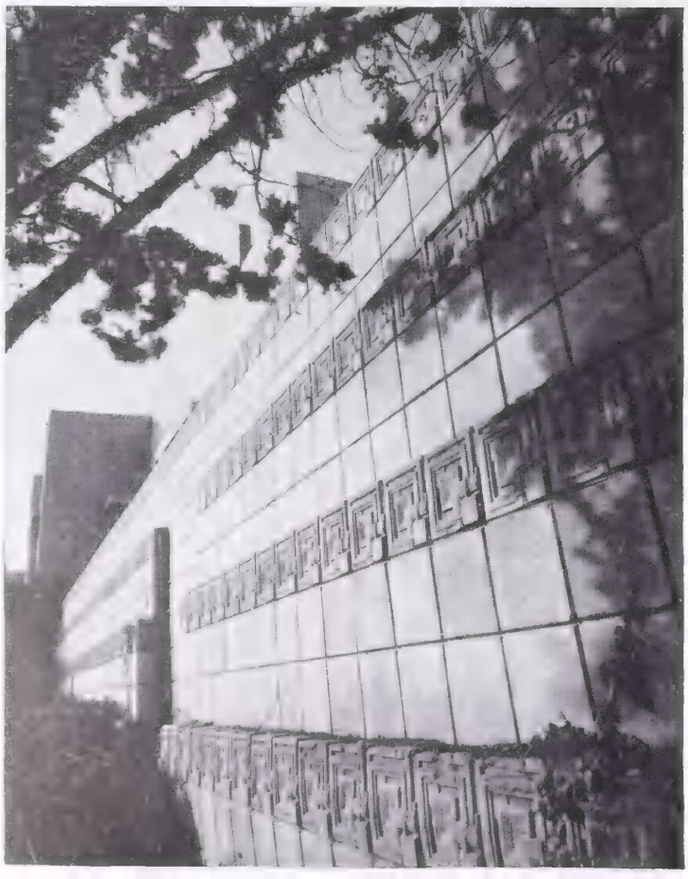
Ornament became anathema to some architects and fell into disuse not because it was in itself bad, but because it was badly used. It was applied to building forms with which it had no relationship in much the same manner that a peacock's tail feathers might be attached to a swan. And the result was equally ludicrous.

Just as borrowed plumage on a swan would be an affectation of glories not his own, so was much ornament, borrowed from past eras, on the architectural forms of the era in which Frank Lloyd Wright was beginning his career.



To him this was not a condemnation of all ornament, but a challenge to discover ornament that was appropriate to these forms and would make them more expressive as human habitation.

At the end of the 19th Century architecture was considered by some men to be mainly the mere ornamentation of building. It had degenerated to a meaningless kind of "cake-frosting." Ornament, then, was a superficial treatment to conceal structure.



To Frank Lloyd Wright ornament was not a method for concealing structure. It was a means of making structure more expressive. (To him structure did not mean just the skin and bones of a building; it meant the interrelationship of the parts as governed by the character of the whole.)

A person can make a very general—and blunt—statement without using adverbs and adjectives. But in order to make his meaning clear and more expressive of his thought (assuming that he has a thought), he will find it necessary to use these qualifying elements of speech. Frank Lloyd Wright used ornament for this purpose in the buildings that he designed.

When he decorated a building element it was to make it more expressive of its role as a part of the (Please turn to page 313)

Concrete, a conglomerate and plastic material with no individual character of its own, except that given it by its user, is transformed by the impression of the mold against which it is cast. This means of qualification was used by Frank Lloyd Wright, in a group of concrete block houses, to make what many people consider a common material into a material having great richness given it by its pattern of light and shade. What desert chieftain ever lived so luxuriously? Yet the voluptuous invitation of this space does not come from expensive materials. Luxury in a Tent-Like Shelter

▪ Although this and other buildings were built as winter quarters for Wright's organization, Taliesin West should not be looked at nor thought of as a house. To them it is a camp in the desert; it is affectionately thought of and referred to as "the camp."

When the Fellowship first went to this desert site near Phoenix, Arizona, neither shelter nor plans for shelter were in existence. They "roughed-it" in tents that first winter while they were putting in the road to the site and the scheme for building was being developed.

Another person might have associated tent-living with only its inconveniences and discomforts and have failed to see any possibilities within it. But it is (Please turn the page)

LUXURY IN A TENT-LIKE SHELTER

In the sitting room which is adjacent to this living space a similarity in character is maintained to achieve unity: The ceiling is covered with canvas; structure of roof is exposed; the wooden fins supporting the beams have the same slope as members supporting trusses of living space.

characteristic of Frank Lloyd Wright and his ability to take a fresh look at a thing. that he realized the particular beauty of sunlight mellowed by passing through canvas and giving a special luminous glow to the interior of the tents.

It was this quality. so pleasant and restful in a land of intense sun. which he desired to capture and to utilize in the structures which were planned and built.

Although the camp has great quantities of stone and concrete in its walls and fireplace masses. much of its overhead shelter has this tent-like quality. It is truly a glorification of the tent but glorified by its rich orchestration of spatial form and its knowing use of an exuberant interplay of light and shadow. Its importance to us, as a fresh thought on how one can live in the desert in the winter time. is its shattering effect on our previous concepts of luxurious living. Truly the book has not all been written.

THE OPEN PLAN—A WAY TO GAIN SPACIOUSNE

Other views of the Bain kitchen show how the basic plan is open, but not so open that the caller at the front door can tell if the vegetables being peeled are turnips or potatoes. A clever system of baffled counters—semi-concealing without partitioning—is the key. Study the floor plan of this house on page 244.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Secondary dining space in the kitchen is hidden from sight of living room by a partial partition, seen here from the living room side. This partition houses TV and books. Ceiling over kitchen is grooved wood, but extends into living area, thus confusing the space demarcations on floor.

to the kitchen, yet each of these three spaces is quite clearly defined. You are well aware of it when you are leaving one and entering another. The change in levels serves as the announcement of new space in one case: the off-set counters become a baffle to isolate the kitchen in the other. Even the master bedroom shares the great central space through a 40-square-foot opening that closes off with a folding screen.

By thus letting each purposeful space borrow from the next, the architect has created interesting vistas throughout the house, some extending well over 80 feet. The deep shadow lines of the shiplap joints on the ceiling accentuate even these long views. The changing levels of the floor and the ceiling contribute, too, to the ever different views that entice the eye.

To achieve this effective use of interior space, the architect chose the simplest of building materials and finishing techniques, with the result that the house cost less than $12.50 a square foot to build. Native Arkansas stone was used for the masonry masses that characterize the house. Western red cedar, an inexpensive wood brought in from California and used throughout the house, has the fortunate quality of making itself at home anywhere.

Because the materials—wood and stone—were so simple, great attention was paid to the details, the important points that characterize a fine house. Simple saw-cuts changed a simple wood box into a light fixture of great refinement. The floor was finished with integrally-colored concrete, then scored in 24-inch squares (the module of the house) with the carborundum blade of a power saw. This made it something more than a simple concrete floor; at the same time it saved most of the cost of floor tile.

Everywhere solutions of great elegance were found within the limitations of the materials themselves, without adding expensive hardware or gimcracks. Even the built-in cabinets and seats were kept within the bounds of simple carpentry.

This ability to get the most out of the simplest materials, combined with the magnificent development of interior space, resulted in true refinement at modest cost.

Following are details on the house (pages 244-245) by Architect Fay Jones for Dr. and Mrs. Calvin Bain.

House Furnishing

By WILLIAM C. GANNETT

Reprinted from a privately-printed book entitled "The House Beautiful" published in 1896 by William H. Winslow and Frank Lloyd Wright.

. . . How much more than house is home! Cellar and walls and roof, chairs and tables and spoons—these are the mere shell of the home.

These are, to be sure, what the young couple talk much about when waiting for the wedding, and this is what the architects and carpenters and house furnishings stores are for. And under city slates and country shingles alike one sometimes finds unfortunates to whom this mere outside, these solid things about the rooms, seem to be mainly what they think of when they think of the rooms; unfortunates to whom the show of their furniture is of more importance than its use. These are men more interested in the turkey on the table than in the people who sit around the turkey. These are women who think more of new carpet than the blessing of the old sunshine. Such men and women, both bear witness that they love their neighbors better than themselves by keeping best things for the neighbors' eyes and the worst things for their own, and who almost gauge their social standing by the fine clothes they can put on for street or church, or by the "dead perfection" of their front parlor.

Perhaps the good wife, looking around a slovenly, unhomelike living room, feels a blush of self-respect at the thought of that cold front parlor, where the chairs sit as straight as the pictures ought to, and the tapestries and crockeries are each in their due place.

When calling at a rich man's home and waiting for Madam to appear, sometimes a silent wonder arises: "Do the people correspond to all this gilt and varnish and upholstery?"

And in a humbler house, when shown into one of those polar parlors, a kind of homesickness comes over one for some back parlor, some kitchen, a bedroom, any place where the people really live. The heart cries, "Take me where the people stay; I didn't come to see the chairs."

A second thought is apt to follow. How much more pleasant, tasteful, homelike every other room in the house would probably become if the expense hidden in this one room were but distributed—there in a quieter carpet, there in a prettier paper, there in a noble picture and all about a dozen little graces and conveniences. If these were added there, where all the time they would be enjoyed by the owners and the users, it would be more a home.

On the other hand, one is sometimes shown into a room, on entering which one feels like bowing to its emptiness in gratitude, because it offers, even bare of the people who evidently do live in it, a festival so cozy to the eyes. Everywhere are uses in forms of beauty. Uses in forms of beauty—that is the secret of a festival for eyes.

In such cases it is quite in order to sing out a little psalm praising the good looks of the room and the things in it that make it pleasant. That is what they are, but not for us first and the home folk last. The home folk first and us outsiders last.

Petition to see a friend's own room before feeling you really know that friend. It is a better test than a bureau drawer. Not the room after a quick run upstairs for two minutes first—but the room just as it is. For a room as it is usually kept is an index of one's taste, of one's culture, and of a good deal of one's character.

THE INNER GARDEN

as light from all sides. Consequently the rooms surrounding an inner garden get the benefit of this kind of light. More than that, they get the benefit of an additional exposure, which means light enters from four directions. The result is a balanced, non-glary, therefore comfortable light.

The emotional effect is like being in a cozy glade or woodland glen. You are not so aware of the bigness of the world, but rather of the niceness of it. You look close-up at the plants as though they were being seen under a magnifying glass, for you are somehow able to pay better attention to them than you do when you see plants out in the bigger landscape.

The inner garden performs an optical trick too. For you see your own house beyond the inner garden, yet you are in the house. How can you see it when you are in it? Yet you do. This intermixing of house and garden has the effect of annihilating the sense of enclosure, the glass barrier. It disguises what is indoors and what is outdoors and the space within seems bigger while it is also much more charming.

Night-time lighting of such an inner garden not only becomes a source of illumination for the rooms or areas that open on to it, but it increases the illusion of space, eliminating the black void of darkness and the sense of being closed in. The glass becomes nonexistent. Indoors and outdoors are one. To most people a night-lighted garden, seen through glass walls, is an unexpected delight, a sort of modern-day enchantment that is particularly pleasurable because it is so rarely experienced, though the trend is growing fast.

PHOTOGRAPH BY JAMES STRONG

Inner garden between children's playroom and garage is in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Conant, Glenview, Ill. Without it, the playroom would have only one exposure, thus would have lacked balanced light. Thanks to the inner garden, it has opposite exposures, creating ideal light and ventilation conditions. Characteristic of the freedom which he gave to architecture, the smooth-flowing circular arcs of this two-story house, designed for his son, sweep outward to embrace Nature. View at left is from the wooded area below house. Parapet of master bedroom balcony is seen against the curve of roof. The living terrace below it, at right, is seen more clearly (at the left) in the other view of the exterior.

A Poetic Image realized in Concrete Form

■ The preliminary sketches for this house, which he designed for his son, Robert Llewellyn Wright, were shown in the November 1955 issue of HOUSE BEAUTIFUL. Today it stands overlooking a wild and beautifully wooded ravine near Bethesda, Maryland.

An aspect of Frank Lloyd Wright's genius, of which we are too seldom fully aware, was his ability to bring the poetic thoughts of his imaginative mind to a concrete reality through construction.

A poetic mind may dream beautiful dreams, but a firm grasp of reality is needed to bring them to realization. More than an ability to draw and a knowledge of building technique is required. It requires an understanding that architecture is for—and by—people.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY P. E. GUERRERO

The living space, shaped by intersecting arcs of circles, opens outward through a continuous wall of windows to a deeply wooded steep glen. Vermouth as you like it— and you will!

For a long time Europeans have known that it's great when you drink it straight. Then came the American version, vermouth on the rocks. Take your pick... extra dry or sweet, in a glass that's high, wide or handsome... but make sure it's Martini & Rossi imported vermouth.

You already know that it makes marvelous Martinis and matchless Manhattans. But once you taste it alone in the glass, you'll know why Martini & Rossi is America's favorite vermouth.

Living room is an example of how you can still develop interesting space in a flat-roofed house. (Turn back to page 239 for plan and exterior view showing how this hip roof expresses itself on the total roof.) Fireplace hood is seamed copper.

Fireplace converts in summertime to become a water garden, as shown above. A water pan simply drops into space where logs burn in the winter. Back of fireplace is a filigree of blocks, left open so people in adjoining TV room can see and feel the fire.

Repeating concrete block columns make a rhythm all through the building, giving a core of continuity. So does the repeat of the square.

Furniture arrangement in living room composes around the interesting fireplace, which turns into a water garden in summer. Deck at door height makes ceiling seem to soar more.

Consistent development of the square motif has produced some rich textures and patterns in the hands of this able architect. The long rectangle develops out of the square (as in front door), which also relates to the concrete block size.

start every day with the sight of something beautiful. . . . We move so freely back and forth between indoors and out that our whole life seems to be spent under the stars and sun. And when the snow comes in winter there's another kind of beauty. Even after seven years here, every day we live we appreciate more beauty added to beauty. . . . There's a feeling of repose and relaxation all around us. Sometimes we lose ourselves in relaxation; with such beauty about you, hours seem like minutes. . . . We have had sadness and grief, as everyone has, but the house in its beauty seemed to comfort us. . . . I do my own work—no help needed, no help wanted—and really it's no work, because the space is so well planned and the materials used are so simple and easy to maintain. There's no magic about it, natural wood mellows and becomes more lovely with use and you never need polish stone. Even when things are not in perfect order, it doesn't seem to matter the way it does in conventional houses. With so much beauty around you hardly notice anything else. We have never, for instance, had to search for art objects to enhance it. It doesn't demand ornament as some houses do. It's a joy. We appreciate it as a piece of beauty, not just as a piece of shelter. It's space to be lived in—not just roof and walls . . . On sunny winter days our heater doesn't work from 11 A.M. to four—and this is New England. It can be 80° inside when it's zero outside. Yet in summer the sun just reaches the terrace door and doesn't get into the house, because overhangs are placed to shade our glass walls. The house is not air conditioned, but visitors often think it is, because it is so cool in summer . . . We think it's the most beautiful house Mr. Wright ever built and we told him so. He said it wouldn't have been a success if we didn't believe that, because that's how everyone should feel about their house. . . . We love our house so much we can hardly bear to leave it. Life is so short that even one day out of our life seems too long to spend away from home. We are always rushing to come home to it. It's hard for us to go away from it to see other things in the world and when we do go, we seem to see other things with different eyes; now we see more in what we see."

Twenty-two years ago Wright designed for Dr. and Mrs. Paul S. Hanna of Palo Alto, Calif., "a home that could be dry shelter in bad weather but could be thrown open by rolling away walls when the sun or stars shine and breezes blow; a home with walls of glass so that the family could (at least visually) always be conscious of sunrise or sunset, the fog bank rolling over the hills, or flowers and trees in the fields."

IN discussing their house in an article in Architectural Record, July, 1938, Dr. and Mrs. Hanna reflected that, as children growing up in Minnesota, roaming the hills and fields during their play hours, they had both grown "to value the freedom of outdoor space as contrasted with the restrictive limitations of buildings to which we returned unwillingly when play was ended." It was the quality of this freedom, these childhood experiences "with spring flowers growing in the meadows, green trees swaying against a blue sky, birds nesting, or cattle grazing on the hills," that they wanted their house to recapture. They said, "when we read Mr. Wright's Princeton University lectures on Modern Architecture, we realized that the values of childhood experiences could be built into human habitation. Mr. Wright showed us that shelter could be so designed that the outdoors could be brought indoors."

Evaluating their life in their new home, they wrote, "In the new surroundings we are learning to live by new patterns. The most noticeable change is the lessening of tension, the increased sense of repose. . . . The house seems to flow on in rhythmic beauty . . . and we conform to the rhythm of the house. . . . The living room will accommodate a group of 75 and not seem crowded or noisy; or two can sit alone in the evening by the fire and read or turn out the lights to look through plate-glass walls to star-studded sky or moonlit hills. . . . Have you ever lain in bed and watched the sunrise or the full moon come up? You couldn't in most houses. We can. We recommend it for tired nerves. . . . The children never feel shut in; even when a wall is closed, there is a sense of being outdoors. . . . Mr. Wright has given us a home that will leave an imprint on the lives of our children. For them, beauty will be a way of living rather than 'pictures to hang on walls.' Every month we re conscious of new assets and ew values. We could never again e contented in a conventional ouse."

And it is certainly a testimony the success of their house that wenty years later, a short while efore Mr. Wright's death, the fannas commissioned him to ex-and the house to meet their cur-ent needs.

Loren Pope, writing of his ouse (A Love Affair of a Man ith his House, HOUSE BEAUTIUL, August, 1948), said: "The hanging levels or planes . . . nd the delicate openness of the ouse give the same sense of re-ease and shelter as walking in forest, where the leafy limbs cut unlight and space into a continu-ng succession of mysteries. The ouse gives you a sense of protec-ion, but never of being closed in. nd of leading you on beyond here your eyes can see. . . . The onest use of materials satisfies he urge you feel when you think ou'd like to have a hide-out in the nountains. What it does is fill the eed for a gentle purging of the oul provided by something simple. atural, and beautiful. . . . You can it by the fireplace at night and ee the stars. . . . The outdoors is o adroitly made part of the living scheme that the dweller breathes as deeply as in a meadow in spring. And he obtains the same kind of unburdening of the little worries of life. That may sound fantastic to one who has never experienced it, but it is true. It is like living with a quiet soul. Some of its peace and calm carry over to you. . . . It is quite fitting to use these lines, since we feel them so deeply, "It leadeth me beside the still waters; it restoreth my soul."

Brooklyn 12, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Spina:

One of the newest additions to our Brooklyn Civic Center redevelopment program is the "American Fore Insurance" building. This structure is exceptionally well-designed and one of its most attractive features is the use of Capri Ceramic Mosaic tile as part of the modern exterior wall surfaces, especially highlighting the upper portions of the building.

I am happy to compliment you on your development of this product for architectural building purposes in this country and your success as a Brooklyn concern.

The recent completion of this building and its contribution to our important Civic Center program is a credit to you and all others responsible for this building.

Yours very truly,
John Cashmore
President.

For unmatched beauty and elegance . . . virtually indestructible . . . unlimited variety in colors, designs and shapes . . . easy, economical maintenance . . . low cost installation . . . guaranteed against: fading, crazing, thermal shock . . . Naturally proven to resist rugged weather and the elements of time.

CAPRI CERAMIC MOSAIC TILES harmoniously and artistically complement the freedom and simplicity of Modern Architectural Design. Architect Leo Brandfonbrener said, "Capri Ceramic Mosaic Tiles were incorporated in our plans because they provide a dramatic combination of color and texture, at competitive cost, while completely maintenance free."

Our thanks to the Hon. John Cashmore, distinguished President, Borough of Brooklyn, for his commendation of Capri Ceramic Mosaic Tiles and the combined efforts which went into the construction of the America Fore building.

We pledge ourselves to continue our tireless search for even greater scientific and artistic advances in the development of CAPRI CERAMIC MOSAIC TILES . . . Gems of clay, spawn from the slopes of Mt. Fall Planting:

The News with Strawberries

There are "nine and sixty" ways to grow strawberries. And they all are worth it.

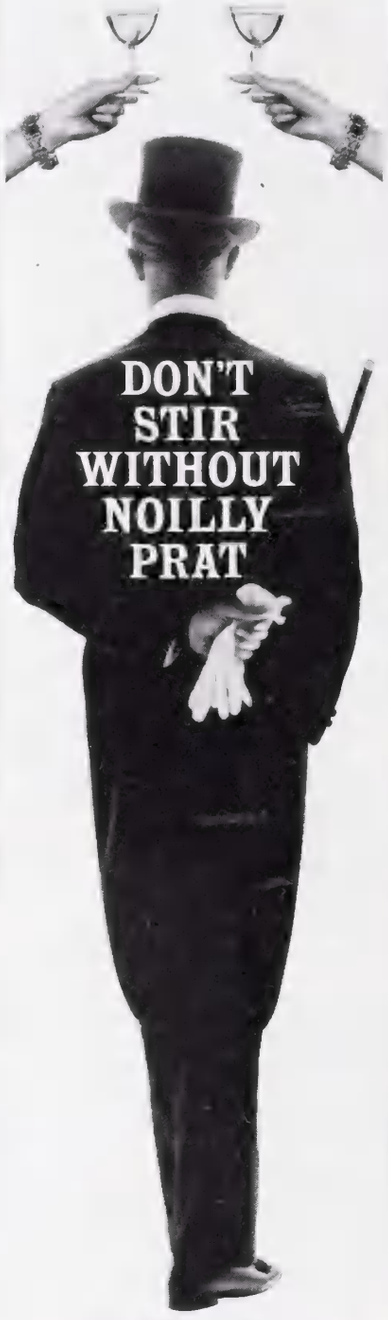
By WILLIAM ALVADORE BUCK

■ Science has been busy with the strawberry and there are many varieties adapted to many situations and many ways to bring in a crop.

In the South, the practice has long been to cultivate all strawberries as annuals, to plant them in the fall or winter; the harvest comes in some 13 months later. Pacific coast planters also set their plants in the winter. In the Northeast fall planting is in the try-and-see stage—about October or November in the climate of New York. Cornell has carried on several experiments in autumn planting, and Professor Slate has reported that eight varieties planted in Ithaca in the fall produced 20 per cent better than those set out in the spring. Here is the program of events as Cornell scheduled them: set out your plants in the fall of 1959; in the spring of 1960, the berries will be well-rooted and send out their runners much earlier than a spring planting; the heavy crop will ripen in the spring of 1961. Fall planted berries need a heavy winter mulch, five or six inches of straw, for example.

Strawberries will do well on almost any good garden soil, but they prefer it on the acid side, even as low as *p*H 5.3. So do not give them lime, unless you find that your soil is very sour.

If the earth has been limed for most garden crops and thus has a *p*H up to 7.0, the strawberries will tolerate it well enough, but the gardener might just dig in some rich forest mold, peat, peat moss or other organic material, without thought whether it is sour or not. Strawberries like it rich but, above everything else, they want water, and such organic decay holds the rainwater ready and in safe deposit. The patch, however, should have adequate drainage. Commercial growers commonly use a chemical fertilizer that is high in nitrogen and phosphorus.



The method of planting is about the center of success. One buys one-year-old plants, as everyone knows, and plants them in the prepared soil in a hole large enough to give ample spread to the roots. However, if the roots on the plants are more than five inches long the gardener may clip them to fit a hole of suitable size. Today, generally speaking, dormant plants are more reliable than those that come from the field, especially when shipped any distance. Dormant plants may be set out two weeks later than those that have developed leaves or blossoms. They may appear pretty miserable to the unpracticed eye but that is only because they are winter bound. For the family of average size 75 plants is sufficient.

If possible, they should be planted immediately on arrival. However, a hot day is bad for planting strawberries and a hot windy day is a quick threat of death. The best way to keep them, if this becomes necessary, is in cold storage at 28° to 30° F. If full cold storage is not handy, they will keep in a refrigerator for a while well enough or buried in the package in a snowbank.

For spring planting

Tried and true procedure for spring planting is to order them delivered in March when they are dormant, and keep them in the cold storage until weather conditions are just right. They will keep perfectly. If the plants have grown much new foliage, they should not be held more than a few days even in storage. Then set them out as early as the spring permits. Early planting is very important. Do not dawdle until somebody hands you a package full of energy. Filibuster not against the stern voice of duty. Plant them!

This is equally important. Dip the roots into water. Then set them in the earth exactly at the depth they have grown, so that, when the surface of the soil has been packed ound them. the crown or head is st at the surface. Too shallow. ith roots above ground. is bad. the crown is covered. it means t and death. Water them. prefer- ly with a liquid fertilizer dis- lved in the water.

The wisest strawberry grower I ow recommends planting them out 18 inches apart in rows three d a half to four feet apart. Some eks after planting. the plants ll send out runners. long slim ms bearing new plants at their rminals. How you manage these nners may determine whether u are a show-off type or one who ves strawberries and wants them quantity. If you cut off all the nners. and thus adopt the "hill" stem. you harvest the largest ber- s. If you allow the runners to ot within a reasonable width of w. say two feet. you use the natted row" method and harvest e larger yield. For the middle- inded there are compromises. hich bring compromise results. ith a clod or a hairpin you may chor one runner on each side of e mother plant and achieve a imple hedgerow" or two or three. d create a "multiple hedge row." owever. six or eight plants for ch square foot is a good all ound limit. In Nature's free-for- , another strawberry plant that owds too close is not a brother. t in all effects. just a weed. bat- ng its own faith for food. light. ter. and life.

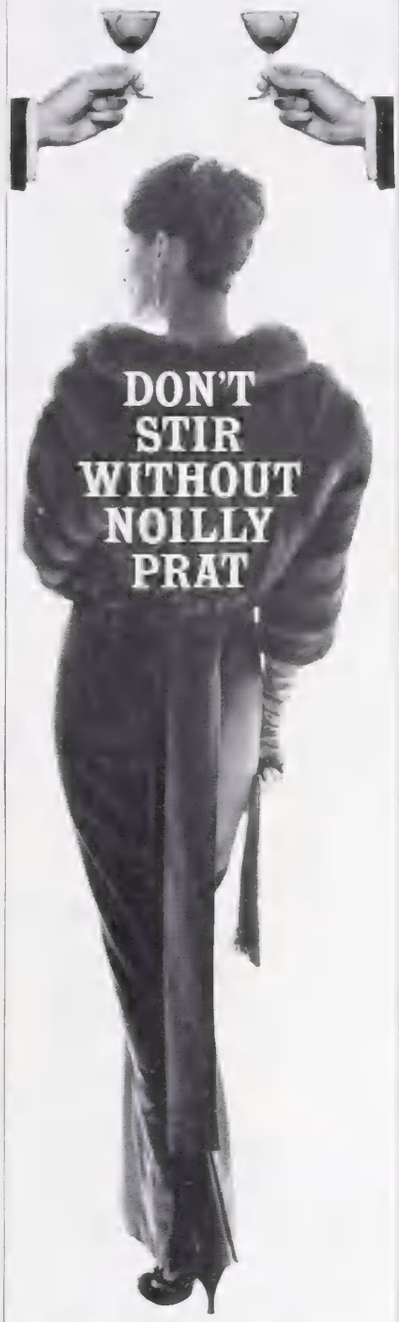
If you employ the hill system. her for standards or everbearers. e vines may be planted closer. e Ohio Experiment Station rec- mmends setting four rows to- ther. the berries a foot apart h way. with a two-foot alley tween each plot of four rows. e station also recommends hoe- g out the first growth of weeds d then laying down a sawdust lch an inch deep.

This hill and sawdust method. roduced after gardener Ruth ut published her article. seems be the right and only sys- n for growing everbearers in field. According to reports. several areas it has produced gh—indeed in Kentucky as high 14.000 quarts per acre. The rieties used were everbearers em." and "Superfection" but s is a mighty production for any riety. The Kentucky experiment s irrigated. be it noted. Perhaps awberries would do well in that t spot in your garden. If it is practical to secure good drain- e there. it might be worth a ance to plant strawberries in lges five to ten inches high.

Now the plant must settle home and grow sturdy in root and leaf. To concentrate this growth it is necessary to cut off all blossoms from the standard bearer for the first year. The blossoms should be removed from everbearers until early June or later if growth has not been too vigorous. In the deep South. however. the practice is to prune only the first set of blossoms. and some growers west of Denver. cut none.

Provide a mulch

No crop needs a growing mulch more than strawberries. not only to conserve moisture and discourage weeds. but also to keep the berries clean. A winter mulch is also necessary as far south as Virginia and Kentucky. though an adequate growing mulch. such as an inch of sawdust. will serve this purpose quite well. Almost anything will do for a winter mulch. even leaves that pack down. for strawberries are the exception to the rule that any plant that preserves a promise of green above ground will live through the winter only under a mulch that admits some light and air. It should be placed before the nights threaten a hard freeze. that is. 20° F. or below. and should be removed from the crowns when growth starts in the spring. Use anything. pine needles. straw. hay. buckwheat hulls. or whatever you can beg. steal. or pay for.



Everbearers planted according to the Ohio experiment should give a good crop the first year—in fact. the monstrous Kentucky harvest came in the very first year. It should continue until frost and for some years thereafter. One well-known gardener. using this hill method except that he spaced the vines 18 inches apart each way and cut off all blossoms the first year. has boasted that he has planted almost a permanent fruiting bed. I don't believe he has. I'll believe that in a year when the Washington Senators win a pennant. if he will believe my story about sighting a toucan in Larchmont.

However. a commercial grower in New Hampshire. who specializes in everbearers only. has declared that he has made fields yield worthwhile crops for four years.

The commercial grower of standard varieties commonly picks only one crop. some 13 months after planting. then plows it under. After the first crop. the harvest falls off. But some gardeners in rich and fortunate locations have kept strawberry patches going in fair shape for as much as six years.

FALL PLANTING: THE NEWS WITH STRAWBERRIES

never plows but keeps her beds under a permanent mulch, has a system for standards which, she says, amounts to a permanent planting. I believe in this one. She builds her rows in this fashion: set three plants six inches apart across the row in line. Three feet down the row plant three more abreast and so on to the end of the row. When runners grow, fix one on each side of the mother plant, a foot distant, in a line parallel to the row. When the mother plant has produced its first crop, destroy it, leaving the newer berries to make their two runners, and fruit the following year. So she proceeds, year after year, with new plants coming on, fruiting and then surrendering their Buddha-nature in the way of all living things. The "row" becomes really three rows, each made up continually of both old and new plants. The deep permanent mulch, ever-rotting, with all plowing assigned to the earth worms, is obviously an inseparable part of the system.

Many gardeners grow strawberries without ever using a dust or spray. I have done so myself. It is wise first to buy registered, virus-free plants, and to know what diseases, if any, are prevalent in your region, and buy plants that resist those diseases. Red stele, which generally inhabits low, wet ground, was once a disease violent enough to put some commercial growers out of business, but science has put them back in the market with varieties that resist the disease, among them "Temple," "Sparkle," "Redcrop," "Surecrop," "Vermilion," "Fairland," and "Stelemaster."

The people who grow the plants the postman brings probably have used two chemical killers on them, perhaps three. The first was chlordane, a poison which, worked into the soil, kills wireworms, grubs, root aphids and other things that crawl and wiggle. The second is so-called all-purpose fruit dust or spray which contains captan for control of diseases, malathion and Metoxychlor for control of other insects. The possible third is a granular product which is also mixed into the soil and there disposes of minute and invisible appetites, such as nematodes.

Some gardeners like to spray on a regular schedule according to the book, but I am the kind who is reluctant to spray until he sees a threat. I have used a poison bait where slugs were bad, but nothing else in the strawberry bed.

Varieties

The safest thing to do in choosing your brand is to call on your local extension agent for the last word, for there may be a disease that is prevalent in your region which certain strains will resist. These standard varieties, those which ripen fruit in strawberry season, have been recommended as resistant to both leaf spot and leaf scorch: for the North East, say as far south as North Carolina and West to Kansas, "Sparkle" and "Fairfax"; for the South, "Suwanee," and for the Northwest, the most popular is an ever bearer, "Rock Hill," "Temple," "Sparkle," "Redcrop" and "Vermilion" all resist red stele, a disease that stunts and wilts by destroying the fine roots.

Most strawberries are not perfectly hardy in the colder climes, but "Sioux" is one that can endure 30 below. This is an older variety and probably it is going under a new advertising alias at present, perhaps actually improved.

There are probably "nine and sixty" ways to grow strawberries if you count strawberry barrels, pyramids and such devices. Strawberries are not difficult. The labor involved is nothing at all in comparison with the flavor of a "Fairfax" or "Sparkle" fresh from the garden.

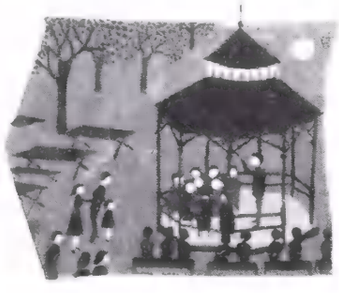
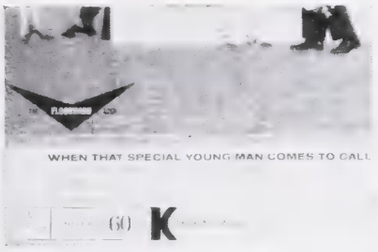
whole building. It should be kept in mind that to him the building was not just its material enclosure. To him space was the essence of the building. Ornament, as a qualifying element, served in the total form as a qualifier of this space—and was, in turn, qualified by the total character of the space.

If he decorated a wall surface, either with an over-all pattern or with an abstract mural, it was to make it more significant as a wall surface, giving form and character to space—and in turn taking its form characteristics from the same idea that had guided the shaping of the space.

He felt that a mural should preserve the architectural flatness of the wall as a surface. He was strongly opposed to murals that destroy wall surface by introducing pictorial or three-dimensional representation. His views and glimpses of nature were otherwise provided for in the doors and windows. His already vital space needed no representation of space within it to give it a sense of completeness.



When he placed a decorative rug on the floor it was done to make the floor more floorlike, more a horizontal plane, in its role in the total scheme. He didn't want three-dimensional effects or appearances on this plane to destroy its integrity as a floor.



When he incorporated a decorative element into the face of the edges of the roofs of his buildings, it was a qualifier. It gave a quality of finesse and finish to the whole roof surface. It was an architectural modulation, serving the same purpose as a vocal modulation used in speaking to terminate a sentence and to make meaning clearer—or a musical modulation used to shape and end a musical phrase.

As such it gave a certain grace to the roof, giving it the sense of hovering protectively over the living space, instead of pushing down upon it. And as a transition between building and sky it made for a more agreeable, less blunt, relationship between building and sky.

To him, ornament that appeared stuck-on or applied, which seemed extraneous and unrelated to the general ensemble, was better eliminated. Ornament that did not "work," which had no effective purpose in the total, was unessential. This does not mean that ornament was functional in a utilitarian sense of the word, but it did mean that ornament was functional in that it did have a use in the building.

Just as no single instrument in a symphonic orchestration exists apart from its place in the total sound structure, so, to him, ornament did not exist apart from its place in the total orchestration of the space structure.

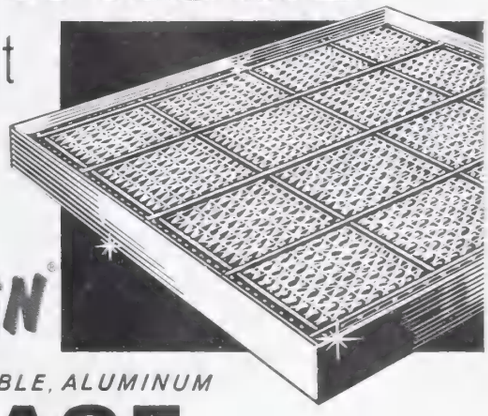
Light from above breaks up a box

"The sun is the great luminary of all life," said Wright. And in his houses he sought new ways to bring in its light from above—the natural source—without exposure to its heat and glare

Clerestory windows, such as these at Wright's own Taliesin North, developed out of the architect's desire to open up the space where structure meets structure. Thus the light comes not through a hole punched in a box, but rather through the framework of the shelter itself. At the same time, by reaching higher for the light, the openings can direct it more dramatically.



Gable-end glazing comes naturally to the Wrightian house. It can often provide major lighting in a house, but because of its height, never creates an exposure problem. The triangle of light here repeats the shape of the room and the work table. Architect-owner: Karl Kamrath.

FIVE PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Long clerestory window releases the eye where the roof meets the wall. Designed by Wright for the home of the late Chicago literary figure, Lloyd Lewis, it may have helped inspire Alexander Woollcott, who wrote to Wright: "Just to be in that house uplifts the heart and refreshes the spirit. Most houses confine their occupants. Now I understand, where before I only dimly apprehended, that such a house as this can liberate the person who lives in it."

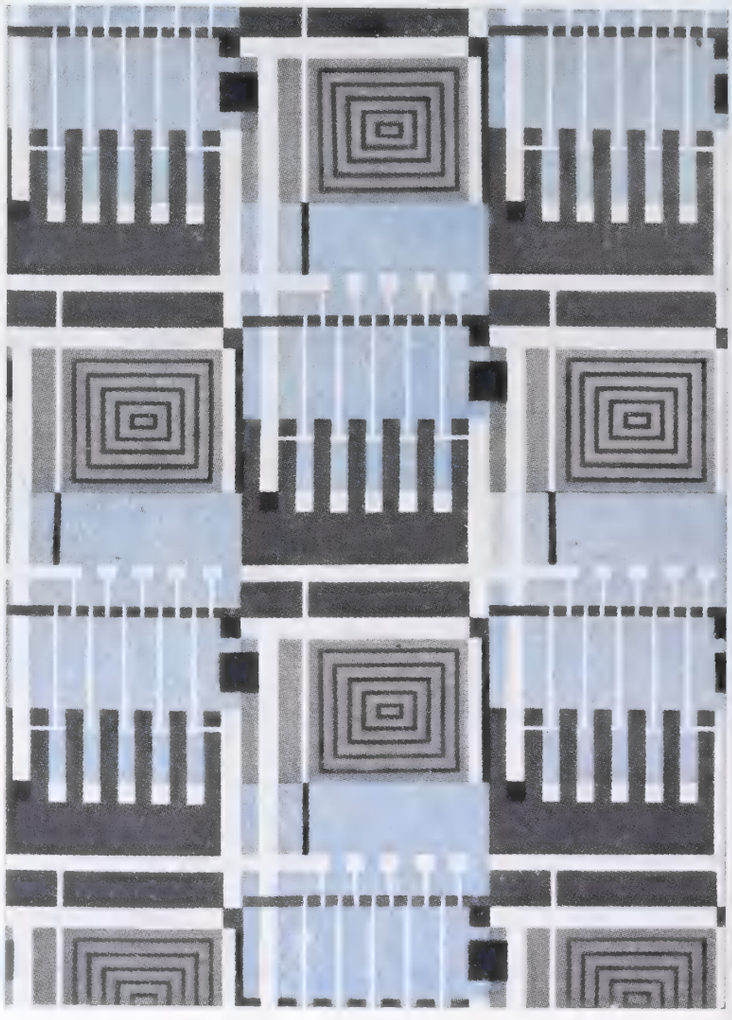
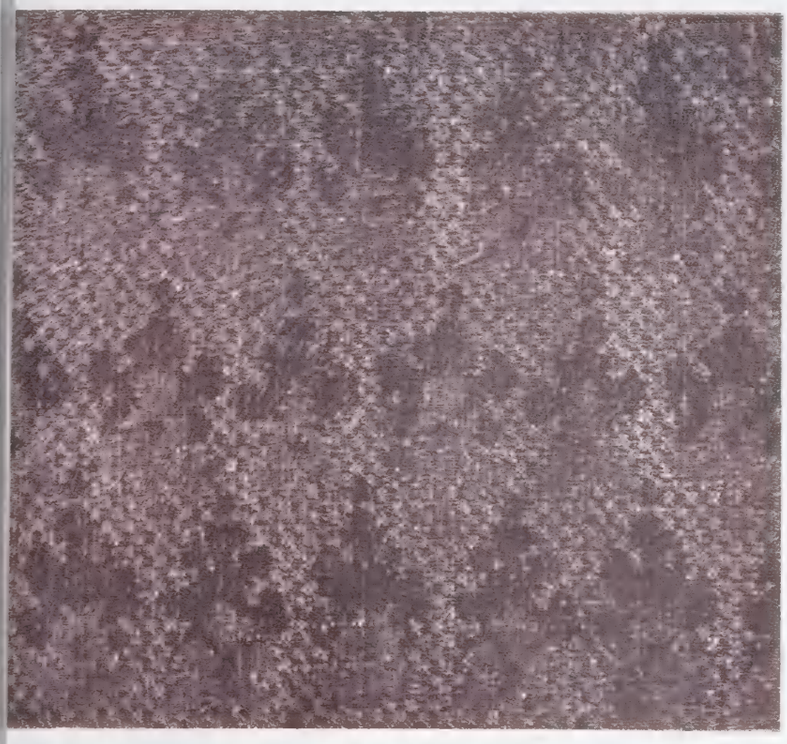
necessities into some bigger system of beauty.

He was a master of putting a lot of things together so they became one big integrated composition. He could load a room with objects, making it rich but not cluttered. He felt you got nourishment from looking at beautiful objects, which justified owning them and having them scattered around in sight.



So he kept such objects in the open—not parked away in cupboards. He made practical use of them, splashing them around exuberantly, but never so exuberantly that he failed to compose them into arrangements with other objects with which they looked well.

He likewise designed the homes of his clients so their prized possessions could be put to good use. He was not like so many present-day architects who think, privately, that "the client will ruin the house." His rooms were not stage-sets that could be spoiled if any little thing, different from what the architect chose, was brought in. His rooms for himself and others always looked best in use, with the necessities of daily living showing and with people going about their daily lives.



About the objects themselves he had an absolutely fresh eye. He looked at rocks and weeds and wild-flowers with the same analytical attention he used for great Chinese bronzes or Japanese screens. He liked things to be genuine and a direct expression—not tortured and contrived.

He hated contrived "effects" as not being genuine. He applied the test of genuine to the smallest and apparently insignificant detail. He preferred honey and sorghum to sugar, which is processed. He used only cereals and flours made of the Wright felt that patterns, such as these bottom two, introduce strong, characterful design into otherwise bare situations (such as the apartment house room that has no architectural interest). They offer pattern without imitating weaves or representational subjects.

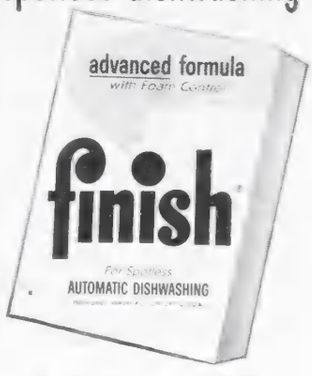
Midyear in 1955, Frank Lloyd Wright began to design fabrics for F. Schumacher and Co., which sell through decorators. Above is a linen damask that he considered suitable for upholstery. Comes in six colors.



Since 1955, Schumacher has manufactured 258 different items by Wright. Here are some of the most recent. For draperies he preferred geometrics, on the premise they merged into the architectural environment better than free-form or florals. Such patterns behave better when folded.

whole grain and ground the grain as little as possible for it to be usable. He tended to be an organic farmer, but not such a purist that he would let no chemical fertilizer get into his ground. (His farming was about 80 per cent organic.) He championed the natural way in all things, saying that God's way was to encourage growth not force it; that when plants and animals were forced (chemically or by any means whatsoever) something would be lost or go wrong.

This preference for the natural was evident in the building materials and fabrics he favored. He liked stone and wood, silk, wool, cotton, and linen. But this is not to say that he was against synthetics. He was fascinated by all man-made products and repeatedly said "this century has a wonderful tool box, but we are just beginning to learn how to use it."

The only time he jumped on synthetic products was when they tried to look like something they were not. He thought a new material should be given its own new look, and that this look should stem from its own nature and character. Therefore he was scornful of designers who could not clear their minds of old associations when they were given a chance to work with a new material. "No imagination," he would snort.

For to him "quality means individuality"—whether it be people or materials or buildings—each being itself in its own inherently different way. This might be called an attitude of "making the most of everything," which really means exploiting the differences — in things, in people, and in situations.

So it is easy to see why he deplored the social creep toward conformity. And also why he had no use for "the self-made, self-willed, self-styled critics" who want to impose on the public their taste in aesthetic matters. He kept encouraging the public not to listen but to make up its own mind.

He believed in using every-day items as decoration. Or, expressed another way, he thought important decorative pieces should be put into every-day usage, because there would be more excuses to look at them, handle them, notice them. For instance, he liked splendiferous gold brocades from the Orient, such as Japanese priests' robes. So he would use them as slumber throws, flinging them across the ends of couches or across the foot of his bed.

He would invent ways to use things that he liked, even though they had never been used that way before. Very few things did he put around purely as ornament. One of these few was an oarlock from a Venetian gondola—a thing as graceful as a bird in flight. (See this on page 232.)

He used a great many bits of art

Wright could find as much beauty in a rock as in a museum treasure. Here is an important mounting he made for a beautifully shaped rock he picked up in the desert. Table it rests on is of rough, un-planed boarding. Note twisted bough.

—particularly Oriental figures and heads, but these were usually used architecturally—to end a long stone wall or to work like an exclamation point at some terminal. So you might say he gave them a legitimate reason for being there.

He was an inveterate shopper, and shopped every kind of store and market, from French and Company to Chinatown. He also seemed to have an instinct for knowing which stores had interesting basements and storehouses. He could put to shame the most veteran shopper in the happy hunting grounds of New Orleans or Third Avenue when it came to finding and bargaining. And he could pick the best fast, without a price tag to tell him and regardless of the character of the shop.

In truth, Frank Lloyd Wright was one of the most sophisticated men ever to live in America. He enjoyed the sophisticated refinements of our times, but he was not in any way dependent on them. He had savored both European and Oriental cultures, lived in cities and in the country, had two homes for two climates, plus an apartment in the Plaza Hotel in New York.

He had tasted the best of everything the world has to offer, but his heart was really in the country. Yet he was neither rustic nor a recluse in the way we are prone to think of country people. Nature was to him the restorer, the fountain of inspiration, the direction giver. He chose the country as a place to live, because he thought it a better way to live.

Like all countrymen, liking land, Wright acquired about 4,500 acres of it between the Wisconsin farm and the winter camp outside of Scottsdale, Arizona. And like an architect liking to build, he built buildings on his land till each home was a great complex of structure—like a hacienda or a small village.

Because 60 to 80 apprentices were always in residence studying and working, there had to be houses or apartments for them and their children. In addition, both the winter and summer homes are capable of putting up as many as 20 week-end house-guests. Both Taliesins have a professionally-equipped theater, capable of seating about 125. And the Arizona camp has a dance theater seating about 250, with a big stage more than 50 feet square and an orchestra pit big enough for a 20-piece orchestra.

The smaller theaters were designed mainly to show movies and for chamber music. The big theater was designed mainly for theatricals and dance performances. All were designed to seem more roomlike and intimate than public theaters, which are so blankly impersonal. These theaters were built (like all the other buildings on the two properties) by the apprentices themselves as part of their training in construction.

The apprentices likewise supplied all the live entertainment. (Movies were the one exception and they were rented through commercial channels.) Nearly everyone in residence participated in some kind of musical activity, and nearly everyone took part in the daily dance exercises, which culminated once or twice a year in big public performances, having great professional polish and quite worthy of being booked on Broadway.

Every Saturday and Sunday evening entertainments were given in one of these theaters—diversified programs of chamber music, chorale singing and movies of high caliber. The number of guests for the week-end evenings might range from as few as 20 to as many as 100, depending on the importance of the occasion, whether it was a real party or just a standard week-end evening.

You can readily see that this was hardly the life of a country bumpkin! Wright had all the cultural advantages of the city, right there in his beautiful homes in the country. He achieved for his own life the social concept that he called "Broadacre City": having the best of both city and country without the disadvantages of either, thanks to the automobile and the express highway. (For further reading about the "Broadacre City" idea, see "The Living City" by Frank Lloyd Wright, published in 1958 by the Horizon Press.)

HIS chief motivation was to have The Best—not only for himself but for everyone else too. This should be, he was convinced, the result of a democratic society. Since he never lost sight of the individual human being (never thinking of people in the mass), he judged everything in the light of how it would help or hurt a person. For instance, he was against down-lighting on the grounds that it was not flattering and kept people from looking their best.

This kind of concern for people—wanting them to look their best as well as be at their best—was typical of a sweetness that permeated his character. There was a loving quality about him, for he loved mankind and thought there were great undeveloped reservoirs of potential in everybody, just waiting to be brought out.

This loving quality made him a most enjoyable companion in a tete-a-tete conversation. Then he would turn the full force of his attention on the other person, making him feel important, witty, brilliantly penetrating, and perceptive. He was a great companion, for his mind explored everything with a freshness which made for exciting conversations. He never played back, as his own, the opinions of that morning's columnist. He was more likely to give forth with a rousing critique on what was the matter with the columnist's line of thought. He was up to the minute and assumed you were too, an always flattering assumption.

THE ONE quality that most people could borrow from Frank Lloyd Wright to improve their lives, without making a move or buying a new thing, was his ability to arrange the little necessities of daily living. He would group things that were to be used together in little rhythmical compositions and interplays, so each object counted and yet helped each other. (For a well-illustrated article about how to do this in Wright's way, see HOUSE BEAUTIFUL for February 1958, entitled "How to Arrange Accessories."

He considered each table top or bookshelf length as an excuse—a chance to arrange a beautiful composition. But he also felt you had to view these small arrangements in the light of the whole room. The small groupings should add up to something good to help the whole room.

He felt every color should be present in a room, even though many were only very small touches, such as ash trays or boxes or vases. He tended to use nature colors, which are soft and easy to live with, and perhaps also because most of his rooms used natural materials and had a close association with outdoors.

Objects from artificial societies (like French figurines and porcelains) do not look well in the environments he created. But he always used expertly Oriental art—especially Japanese screens and scrolls and lacquers. This might be explained by the fact that Japanese art has always stemmed out of Nature as did Wright's work, and he readily admitted he had been influenced by Japanese art—but not architecture.

He was a master of the amenities and he believed we could not claim to be civilized until each of us was abundantly supplied with them... but that we must understand them and earn them for they cannot be possessed until earned.

All groups of this rich ethnic mix have left their trace. The English, who have a nearby set of Virgin Islands of their own, naturally contributed their custom of driving on the left. The Danes left most of the place names and their tidy tradition of cleanliness and industry, so that in the Virgins you find little of the squalor that so often afflicts the tropics. There's a nice appreciation of hygiene, of good plumbing and clean kitchens, of mechanical equipment that works—all of which adds immeasurably to most Americans' enjoyment of a vacation. The language of these exotic isles is English, and even if it is often overcast with a piquant West Indian accent or an amusingly unfamiliar turn of phrase, you know what people are talking about, and that's restful.

There are rich and tantalizing relics here to pique the imagination of any traveler who enjoys the sport of trying to visualize the past—from inscrutable Carib inscriptions on stone in the mysterious forests of St. John, to pirate lookouts, to the melancholy ruins of great houses and sugar mills, part submerged in jungles of jasmine and frangipani to the reconstructed courtliness of Danish administration buildings and ballrooms on St. Croix.

But for most tourists, the Virgins are swimming-sailing-sunning country, a place for "slingarin'", as the West Indians say, meaning fun. Remarkably clear waters and a colorful submarine world of flora, fish, and sunken hulls make this happy hunting ground for snorkelers and skin divers. U. S. Frogmen train here. You can learn the techniques ($7.50 for three hours instruction) at the Virgin Islands Skin Diving School in St. Thomas. The less kinetic can see all this through glass-bottom boats. Yachting and boat-rental facilities are among the best in the Caribbean. Deep-sea fishing is excellent.

And since the Virgins are a free port where the goods of the world arrive duty-free, shopping is a major tourist activity. We found the best bargains in the most expensive things—hand-made Danish furniture, Danish and American silver, Swedish glass, English china, French perfumes, Swiss watches, German cameras, and liquor of all kinds. The Virgin Islands have also developed some characteristic resort fashions—not cheap, but original—so you can arrive trousseauless and acquire an appropriate wardrobe on the scene.

You can indulge in these pursuits according to your tastes, depending upon which of the three islands you make your headquarters. All move to a leisurely West Indian rhythm, yet all have characteristically different and decided personalities.

St. Thomas

Here's the playboy of the group, the place to stay if you must have your loafing interspersed with a bit of bustle and your nights as active as your days. The confetti-colored old houses of Charlotte Amalie, the big town, spill down over steep hills and narrow streets to the harbor and the busy but casual main street, Droningens Gade. It has certain elements of McDougal Alley, superimposed on the solid old warehouses of the sailing days, great stone vaults, many of which have been turned into shops. This imaginative Bohemianism has been imported by American artists who have moved here in great numbers.

Sightseeing will suggest itself to you almost automatically—Government House: Drake's Seat (a great view of the harbor and surrounding waters): 99 Steps: the old Synagogue where in true orthodox fashion they keep sand on the floor; a cruise of the harbor. But a tour of the out-of-town will in itself give you a good idea of the island. You can rent a Volkswagen or an English Ford for about $8 a day or $48 a week, and be off independently up the hills to Mountain Top Hotel with its orchid gardens and stupendous view: Van Dyck's plantation guest house: the new Flamboyant, built on the island's old embattlements: Estate Contant, with its old sugar mill and an excellent restaurant. Chateau Chinon, on the grounds: the Mafoli apartment hotel, which has probably the finest panorama of the town; the galleried Trade Winds Hotel, where clients are as much addicted to the charm of the decoration as they are to the views.

In town, Bluebeard's Castle, built about a pirate's stone tower lookout, has the old-world dignity of a grand Danish town house, but with a saltwater swimming pool. Its bar-terrace may give you a start—it's right on top of the tombstone of what purport to be Bluebeard's seven wives. Also right in the town is the famous Hotel 1829, another smaller town house of an earlier day; and Smith's Fancy, a charming conversion of an old dwelling and patio into a 20-room guest house. The Virgin Isle is the island's one frankly resort hotel, with swimming pool and the usual glittering accoutrements.

None of these hotels is directly on swimmable waters, but all arrange for guests to be transported to the beach—to the famous Magens Beach, reputed to be one of the finest in the world, or Morningstar.

On-the-beach hotels are the Caribbean, the Tropic Isle, Morningstar Beach Club, and Bluebeard's Beach Club. And across the harbor on Water Isle there's a new beach club and cabana colony, with houses for rent or sale. You can ferry over here from Charlotte Amalie for a day's diversion.

Renting a house recommends itself as a great idea for families, although living and groceries come high on these islands that must import their basic necessities. Realtors in Charlotte Amalie are Van Dyck, Brown, French, Clerk-Alexander, and Bolongo Estates.

Shops in Charlotte Amalie are ubiquitous, some quite charming, especially the cavernous, cool old warehouses, arched in two-foot thick stone walls. There are intriguing off-the-main-drag shops in little alley communities, like Beretta Center and Palm Passage, not all equally good, but at least interesting to browse through. Shops we felt had the most to offer us are the Maison Danoise for Jensen Danish silver, Royal Copenhagen, and English china, and Orrefors crystal. The Continental has a broad choice of imported gifts, clothing, gloves, and perfumes, and especially Danish furniture, rugs, and cooking ware. Go to the Scandinavian Silver Center for Hingelberg and Michelsen Danish sterling, David-Andersen Norwegian enamel, Zeiss and Leica cameras, and Royal Worcester bone china; the Spanish Main for local resort fashions and Italian knitwear. For high-style, made-to-order outfits in Indian madras and similar fine cottons go to Elverhoj.

Food here doesn't seem to be as provocative as it ought to be, considering the cosmopolitan and West Indian background of the place. Conch chowder is the one indigenous dish that shows up frequently on menus. Good restaurants are the Chateau Chinon, Mountain Top, the 1829 charcoal grill, and the restaurant at Yacht Haven, where there are also hotel accommodations. Bluebeard's Castle sets forth a good luncheon buffet.

As for night life, it tends toward the steel band and calypso variety of entertainment, notably at the Bamboushay, Sebastian's, the Pink Barrel, and The Gate. Trade Winds usually has intimate, sophisticated, around-the-bar divertissement. It's all pretty casual, there's little full-fig dressing up, but they usually like men to wear jackets and ties. The last week in April is Carnival in St. Thomas with costumes, parades, and general lid's-off goings-on.

St. Thomas is also headquarters for chartering a yacht to take you cruising through the West Indies. Or, a teasing possibility, you may island-hop by air on the charter flights of Island Air, Inc., which has offices in the airports at San Juan and St. Thomas. This line also has a scheduled flight from San Juan direct to St. Croix.

St. Croix

St. Croix has the bucolic, green and rolling look of a tropical Connecticut. But you know you're not near home when you see its fertile cane fields punctuated by the silhouettes of defunct sugar mills like cropped-off beehives of antique stone. These mills are much in demand for remodeling into dwellings by "continentals," as we mainlanders are called.

Probably a hangover from the days when it was the seat of Danish government, St. Croix has a mood of aristocratic dignity. You are, of course, aware of this in the town of Christiansted, the capital, where the old Government House and entire wharf area are now a National Historic Site. Its neo-classic seat of government with its interesting kitchen and mannerly ballroom is being restored and refitted with replicas of its original furnishing. The arcaded old tropical-colonial shops are being preserved. You can see the hardware store, still operating, where Alexander Hamilton once worked. It is all handled with nice restraint so that you can revisit the past without feeling that this is a trick to bring on the tourist trade.

There is residential rather than a resort atmosphere in St. Croix, despite the fact that vacationers can enjoy all the boaty and beach-life pleasures they have a mind to. The map is still marked with the quaint old estate names—Upper Love, Lower Love, Whim, Humbug, Mary's Hope, Betsy's Jewel, Peter's Rest, Judith's Fancy. ("Fancy," our driver told us, "is the way you build your house to suit your liking.") You can visit the beautiful, nostalgic ruins of their great houses, built by adept West Indian craftsmen of native mahogany and stone to reproduce the ambitious continental and Georgian architecture of the 18th Century. Some of the estates and many of the old town houses have been privately restored and handsome new houses are going up.

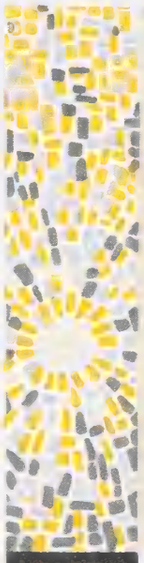
Deem yourself lucky if you have the opportunity to visit any of these private homes, old or new, which are usually open during a week in February for the benefit of local charities.

There is much land development going on down here. And since the climate, landscape, and atmosphere seem so benign, it occurs to most travelers that this would be an idyllic place to build a retirement house, pocketbook willing. Land is not cheap, nor are building costs, but the Virgins are anxious for investment and offer certain tax amnesties to the enterprising who want to develop the land agriculturally.

For those intrigued by the idea of seasonal rentals or land purchase, realtors in Christiansted are Pivar, Ay Ay, Lawaetz Land Development, Bruce and Mary Millar, and Estates of Judith's Fancy.

Some of the most attractive accommodations near Christiansted are the Buccaneer Hotel, high, breezy, close to a quintet of beaches; the Mahogany Inn, a restored merchant's house in the town; and Richmond Plantation, a 1720 estate house furnished in appropriate antiques. The Club Comanche, in town with a swimming pool and a 72-foot yawl offers tourists the fun of a day-long excursion over to Buck Island and its white-coral desert-isle beaches. Cottage colonies, some with housekeeping cottages, are the Hotel on the Cay, St. Croix by the Sea, Turquoise Bay Cottages, and the Village at Cane Bay. Scheduled to open this winter is Grape Tree Bay.

Near Frederiksted, St. Croix's second big town, are the most attractive Estate Carlton, a group of restored plantation buildings built about an old sugar factory and boasting a nine-hole golf course that is open to visitors; Sprat Hall, with its own 17th-century sugar plantation ruins and a private beach; Estate Good Hope, new and open to the sea; La Grange and cottages, an elegantly restored estate house; and Fleming Cottages, which included housekeeping facilities.



All the sea sports—aquaplaning, water skiing, snorkeling, fishing, skin diving—are here, plus excellent riding. Shopping is not so urgent or varied an activity here as on giddier St. Thomas, although you can get the same kind of duty-free goods. The big bargain is St. Croix-made Cruzan rum. You get your night life, flavored by the steel band, as it's whipped up at the hotel or guest house, and a favorite evening diversion is to hotel-hop, sampling the entertainment put on at various hotels on the island. As someone has said, you do the rounds of Christiansted and Frederiksted and then go home to bedstead. Entertainingly named Christiansted garden nightclubs are Morningstar, In a Calabash. At the Sign of the Unicorn, and the King Christian, a restaurant well worth visiting to see its fine collection of antique Danish furnishings. In Frederiksted the Coconut Grove is the major night club. The gayest goings-on occur at the carnivalesque Christmas season.

But year-round a peculiarly St. Croix nocturnal divertissement is the moonlight lobster party, a congenial cookout on the beach that involves wading into the sea to catch your own lobster by flashlight. You broil it, sauced with butter and lime juice, and eat it accompanied by Cruzan rum daiquiris and Calypso music. Your hotel can arrange this for you.

St. John

St. John is the real far-away island of the Virgins, not in actual distance but in the unspoiled, primitive beauty of its white crescent beaches and aquamarine-clear bays. The dense lushness of its tropical forests where the fierce Carib Indians used to live has long since overgrown the proud sugar-growing estates that made the island important in the 17th Century. If you hike and explore you will find the traces—in abandoned sugar vats now rampant with wild flowers, in the crumbling stone walls of former driveways. You may find a chip of 18th-century household crockery in the tangled rubble of vines and stone.

It's good to know that St. John is destined to stay unspoiled, because the better part of the island is now one of our national parks, to be conserved from neon signs and glittering palaces of commercial tourism.

It has one resort, Caneel Bay Plantation. This is so casual and understated, its luxury so unobtrusive, that living in its beachfront rooms or cottages, you're hardly conscious of a break between indoors and out. The beach, shaded in sea grapes, and the clear bay water seem to be personally yours.

The little bays of St. John are secluded paradise for swimmers, sailors, and snorkelers. Few beaches we've seen in the world can match the South Seas charm of Trunk Bay, a great sandy crescent between a shady coconut grove and the clear water of the sea. Snorkeling is good here, as it is at Chocolate Hole where you can find yourself face to face with a submarine coral forest inhabited by such colorful finny friends as angel fish and sergeant majors, or the incredible ray. Stevens Cay is happy hunting ground for collectors of shells, sea fans, and coral. Out in the sea, there are fish to be caught, and provisions are easily made for you to catch them. You can spend a good day at Henley Cay, swimming, exploring and sampling a native luncheon. For diversion on a Saturday you may cruise over to Tortola, in the British Virgins, to see the native market. You must, if you value interesting human beings, take a jeep ride across the little island with Elaine Nathaniel, who knows every tree and flower—the tamarind, the poison tree, the mango, the clashie-melashie, the bellyache balsam—and everybody. You could also do this trip alone by hired jeep or muleback, but her edifying presence is half the fun. The road, improved, is still a rough experience.

Perhaps the most intriguing excursion of all is a visit through the tropical forest to the Carib pool, probably a sacred spot to the warriors, where the rocks are incised with curious, indecipherable petroglyphs.

By all means see the town of Cruz Bay, drowsily West Indian, but with a new library and a definite air of growing better all the time. You'll feel proud that these mannerly people are your fellow Americans.

Of such innocent, tranquilizing activities is your day made up at Caneel. There's no night life except for a weekly evening of dancing to the Tortola Steel Band, an occasional movie or a talk on the island's flora or fauna. And most guests are delighted to settle for this after a day in the sea and the sun. For giddier amusement, you can go over to St. Thomas by launch. After 7:30 P.M. you must charter your return passage from the Red Hook landing from Peter Dohm, who runs a launch to Caneel, a painless price if split among a group.

Other accommodations on St. John are sparse. Cruz Cottages has three housekeeping cottages; Gallows Point has four. And there's nothing fancy about them, except the luxury of the most leisurely, dolce far niente, get-away-from-it-all atmosphere you could find anywhere in the world.

Since prices on lodgings in the Virgin Islands can vary in winter time from $100 a week for a simple cottage to $60 a day in a hotel, we'd refer you to your travel agent for more specific rates, or write for these and other information on the Virgin Islands to the Virgin Islands Department of Tourism and Trade, St. Thomas. Consider these islands for a summer vacation too. Rates are considerably lower, the weather is good, and the foliage at its most vivid.

To get there: Pan American and Eastern Airlines fly from New York via San Juan, where you switch to St. Thomas, or you can continue this flight for a half-hour flight to St. Croix. Complete round trip to St. Thomas, $153.20; to St. Croix, $162.20. Pan American flies to St. Croix from Miami, $118.40 round trip. To get to St. John, you fly to St. Thomas, cross the island by taxi to Red Hook landing, and from here make the four-mile crossing of Pillsbury Sound by launch.

Eastern Steamship Line's S. S. "Evangeline," sailing out of Miami, once every two weeks stops at St. Thomas. Weekly Bull Line steamers from New York take you to San Juan where you can take a hydrofoil Flying Boat to St. Thomas or St. Croix. Occasional cruise ships of other steamship lines call at both ports. Alcoa Steamship runs frequent 12-passenger freighters to St. Croix.

Ducks and Decorating

At home, the imminence of the duck shooting season brings to mind that very special part of the world known as the Eastern Shore of Maryland, meaning the eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay where you can hardly travel twenty paces without seeing an off-shore duck blind. The Season is November, and if we were doing it, failing an invitation to one of the handsome estates that are hidden from the highways and can only be seen from the waterlanes, we'd headquarter at the Tidewater Inn in Easton. The town is small and quaint, in an area of salmon-pink old brick and American history. The famous Wye Oak is a short drive away. You are also in the crab cake country—although almost all little Maryland tends to pamper the palate of anyone who enjoys good crab meat (in every form), diamond back terrapin, country ham, and beaten biscuit.

This recalls an unexpected encounter with an ambrosial delicacy called a butterscotch brownie at the Charter House Motel on Route 50 outside Annapolis (a highly recommendable place to stay if you're going to "do" that noble old town). It's also the first motel or hotel we've seen where the family dog travels first class, welcomed with a package of goodies upon arrival, and invited to take his constitutional in a woodland glade thoughtfully landscaped with fire hydrants. Charter House Motor Hotels in Newton and Waltham, Mass., Washington, D.C., Alexandria, Va., Euclid, O., Bangor and Kittery, Me. follow the same policy.

Annapolis, apart from the vigorous goings-on of the Naval Academy, is one historic town that has kept its authentic boxwood-scented flavor of the past without bogus additions and ballyhoo. It occurs to a design-conscious eye that it is not an easy town to modernize. The stately time-mellowed Georgian buildings on the St. John's College campus have the look of belonging to each other and to the land, although reason tells you they probably pose all sorts of practical problems of function and upkeep. Yet you wonder what has really been gained by the new "functional modern" auditorium that's raising its deadpan walls on those tree-shaded lawns. It seems to us that good traffic patterns, air conditioning and easy upkeep can't quite atone for shattering the old design totality. Reduced to your own problems, this is something every remodeler must bear in mind.

Even if you're no buff of the 18th Century, see the town's handsome Georgian houses if only to marvel at the craftsmanship of their construction, the skilled woodworking detail and the concept of the good life they represented when our land had hardly been settled 150 years. Aficionados of Chippendale, Maryland hunt tables, Lowestoft, Palladian windows and similar classicisms have a field day here. The Chase-Lloyd House and the Hammond-Harwood House are special gems. There are daily walking tours guided by well informed ladies. From September through May you must make advance reservations. In the spring there are special garden tours. Wright interlocks site and structure

A Wright house, seen on the landscape, has a natural inevitability that is far more than coincidence

● The remarkably gentle association between the building and its site, which is characteristic of all Frank Lloyd Wright's designs, was consciously and carefully brought about. It is a kind of give and take, whereby the structure offers within its architectural framework of walls, roofs, and pavings opportunities for Nature to flourish. Thus there is created a transitional stage between the enclosed portions of the house and the natural scene.

This is amply and well demonstrated at Taliesin North (shown here), where the house and grounds intermingle in a delightful way. Walls and pavings and stone plant boxes interlock in a romantic sequence of courts and terraces ascending the hill.

There is no hard and fast line between the house and the outdoors. The materials of the house flow out to link interior with outdoors to become pavings, steps, terraces, walls, and seats.

Even as you arrive and alight from your car, the broad stone steps are there to receive

Wright could wed a house to its site better than any other designer of our times. He did it with a sense of contours, a use of strong horizontal lines, a sympathy for roof lines and how to make them follow and repeat a hillside. One way was to wrap the house around a piece of the outdoors, as at left. Another way was to bring the materials of the walls and chimneys down onto the ground and out across the ground horizontally, to make steps, walls, walks, benches. He wouldn't permit a strong line of demarcation where the building ended and the outdoors began. They intertwined. As a result his houses seem as big as the outdoors. And you get a sense of being sheltered, even when you are outside.

you. You walk on this same stone for 60 feet, and you are still walking on it when you have entered the foyer and the sitting room (see photograph lower right for this foyer and sitting room). The same stone is also used in the piers which give a line of demarcation between the foyer and the sitting room.

This consistency between indoor and outdoor materials is one of the important ways Wright married house to site.

Here you see how the transition from outdoors to indoors can be as subtle as the transition from room to room inside. There are almost no demarcations to announce when one ends and the other begins. All is one continuous entity.

Mr. Wright's summation of site planning is this: "Build your house so that you may still look upon all that charmed you and lose nothing of what you saw before the house was built—but see more. Architectural association accentuates the character of the landscape if the architecture is right."

A small house can take on dignity and a look of bigness when it is tied into the site with low outlying walls. This retaining wall, a continuation of the sill-height wall of the house, creates a terraced extension, knits house into landscape. Aaron Green, architect.

The Wrightian Way:

Extend the structure into the landscape

● Wright gave careful thought in all his houses to the exterior expansion that makes the living area seemingly extend to the property line—the whole garden as a part of the house. In all his buildings there is a halfway link where Nature and architecture intertwine.

Letting parts of the house extend beyond the enclosed structure creates this transitional link. But it is effective only where terraces, retaining walls, steps and walks are taken into consideration as extensions of the floor plan of the house. Especially, completely detached features like tennis courts or swimming pools offer a great opportunity to repeat the lines, features, and materials of the main building to give bigness and oneness to the whole scheme.

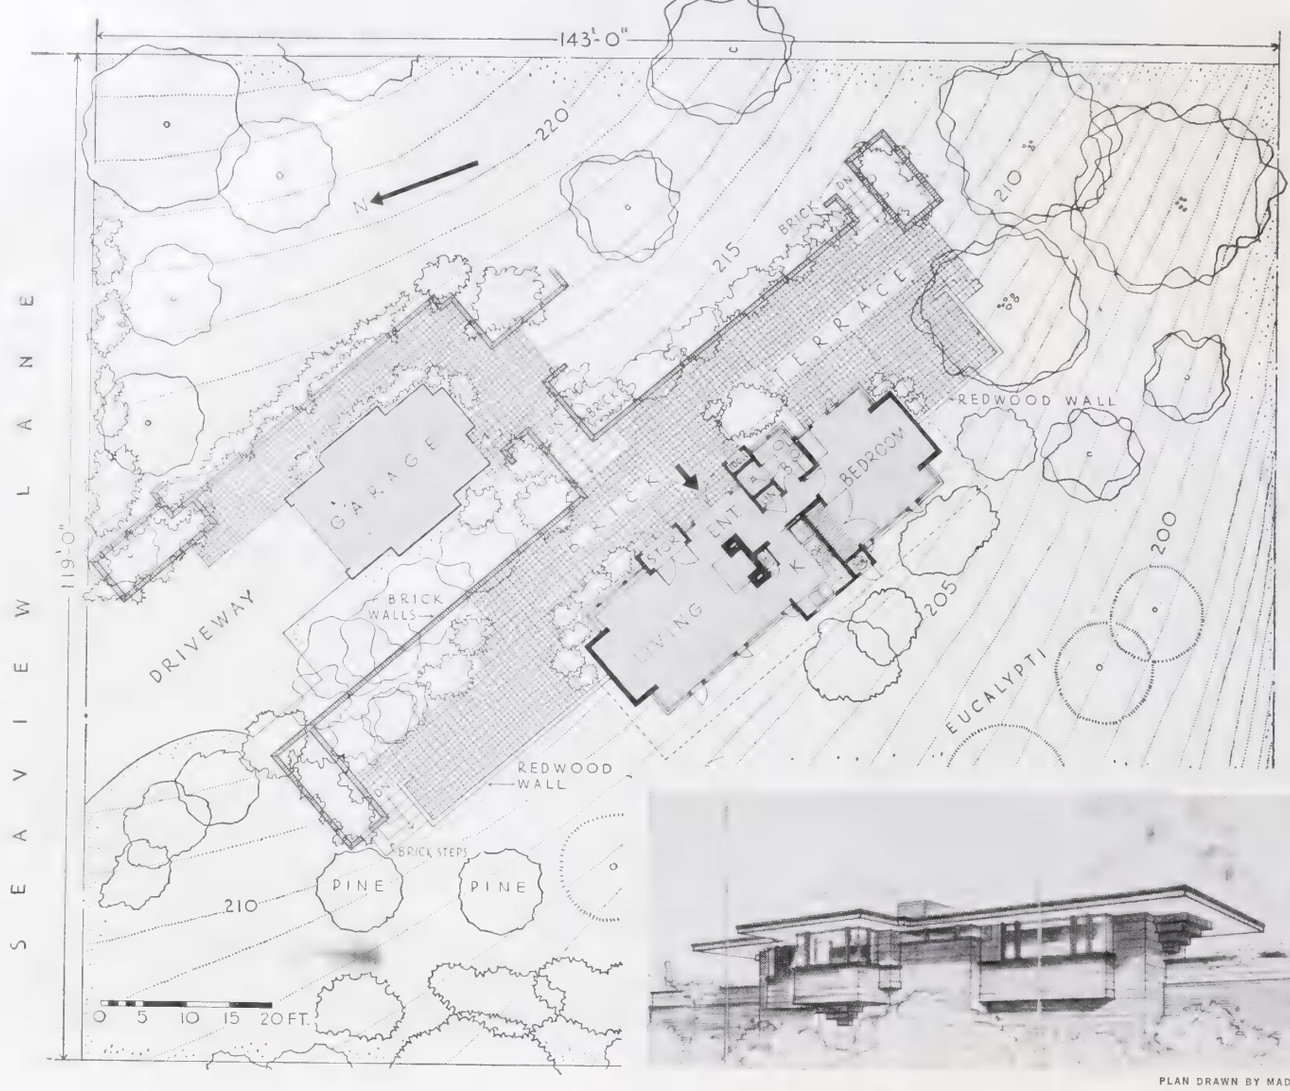
Wright showed his students many different ways to achieve this harmony between a building and the surrounding landscape.

No effort is wasted on isolated effects or arbitrary free-form curbs and pavings. Instead, wherever retaining walls are needed or steps for a change of level, they are kept in line with the house plan so they occur, no matter how distant, as a portion of the building emerging in the landscape. By the same token, within the terraces and walls that are part of the house there can be more formal features providing for plants and water in the orderly semi-confinement of planting boxes and pools, completing an elision between art and Nature.

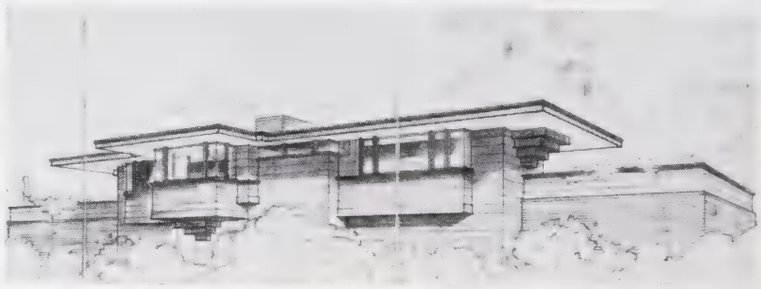
Just as outlying walls may extend into the garden, nature can mingle with the building, as in this entrance court—a transitional blend between outdoors and shelter. Designed by Bernoudy and Mutrux, for Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Grand.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

In the garden at Taliesin North broad inviting steps lead from a garden court to the hilltop. Partway up, a circular stone seat and fountain encircle the base of a giant oak. The composition is characteristic of Wright's masterful sense of transition from one place to another, even outdoors.



These broad steps accentuate the intimate realization between the house and the ground so the building settles in as part of the total scene. The extension of the floor as a broad base for the structure ties the house visually to the ground, creates a pleasing terrace. Bernoudy and Mutrux, architects.



The necessary leveling of the hillside for the entrance court of the Paul residence, is turned to advantage to give spread and importance to a small building. Low wall that retains the hill lengthens look of the house, makes house and entrance more important-looking. Aaron Green, architect.

Even on a sloping site a house can be given a firmly rooted quiet stance. Here the floor level is extended as a paved area and an adjoining grass terrace is shaped to accentuate the horizontal lines of the building. Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Scharff, owners. Bernoudy and Mutrux, architects.

The site plan, with main lines parallel to ground contours for economy of construction, emphasizes land form by use of architectural elements (steps, terrace, retaining walls) and also takes advantage of this diagonal position to gain quality of being uncramped by boundaries.

PLAN DRAWN BY MADELAINE THATCHER

Making a little Estate out of a Small Area

● Many people have wondered at Frank Lloyd Wright's particular "magic" which he used to place a house upon a piece of ground so that both house and ground gained in quality by this association.

This seeming "magic" is basically not a mystery but a common-sense and realistic approach to designing a house for a particular site. He did not design the house apart from the site and then try to put it on the site, hoping it would fit or that the site could be fitted to it. (This is the flaw with stock plans or "stock thinking.") His design began as a general scheme for the use of all of the site.

As James De Long (architect for the house shown here and a former apprentice to Mr. Wright) has learned, he began a house by seeing it in its whole relationship to its total environment. He sought to make the most of the site and of all of its features, including those outside of its legal boundaries. He considered how one drove up to the house, lived in it, and moved about—inside, outside, and around it. He considered what one saw and what happened to him as he moved about.

This house (which cost $20,000 including garage, landscaping features and design fee but not land cost when built in 1953-54) is an illustration of the results which this method (Please turn to page 332)

The broad and 90-ft.-long brick terrace (seen here from area farthest from street), as one continuous area interrupted only by planting beds, is a bold gesture which gives a sense of bigness to the whole house, not only area-wise, but as a way of living.

The casually angled entrance drive, more free in feeling than usual right-angle arrangement, gives more distance from street to building.

Generously proportioned steps, with low risers and broad treads have a sense of dignity about them and make changes in level important, giving spatial interest to the approach to house.

The creation of long vistas suggests a freedom of movement and great depth in space which is reinforced here by extent of paved terrace and directional lines of retaining walls and roof.

can produce. It shows, by the use of the site, that quality living is not dependent upon acres of ground, but upon the quality of thinking and planning that can be put into even an acre—or less—of ground.

The house is not placed at an angle with the street "just to be different." It is placed in this position because the contours of the land are at an angle with the street and it is more economical to build parallel with the contours.

Building with the contours does not always reveal the interest inherent in land forms. Here advantage was taken of the gradual slope of the land to create a change in level between the entrance walk and the terrace. This variation in level makes one aware of the slope of the ground and adds interest to the process of entering and leaving the house. The broad and generously proportioned steps at this change of level give a dignity to the process.

Interest is also added at the approach to the house by the manner in which the entrance walk is brought around the garage and then turned toward the house. At the turning-point there is an element of surprise: the terrace and house, previously concealed by garage and planting, are suddenly revealed.

The brick-paved terrace, as one large architectural element that is twice the length of the house, makes the house appear larger in extent than it is. The length of the terrace, 90 feet, is emphasized by parallel lines of retaining walls, steps, and house; their directional movement makes it seem even longer.

But the terrace is more than a visual trick used to make the house seem larger. Its ample proportions give a bigness to one's impression of how the house is lived in. It is a big gesture—with no suggestion of the parsimonious about it. Although the terrace is interrupted by a few planting beds, the retaining walls on the uphill side and the parapet walls on the downhill side clearly make its extent known.

The terrace also makes one more aware of the slope of the land. Any strong horizontal line or surface in the landscape will make one more aware of the variation from the horizontal.

INFORMATION PLEASE . . .

When sending requests to HOUSE BEAUTIFUL for further details on products, sources, ideas or company names you've seen on these pages, please include your full name and address, a full description of the product, idea, etc., the issue and page number (if known). If the house had been designed with its long dimension parallel to the street (as too many "tract" houses are, with their front yards and their back yards), it would not have had this sense of generosity. It would have been cramped and limited at its side boundaries at least. And probably it would have been somewhat limited in its front side, since, in this day and age, there is little pleasure to be gained from exposing our lives to the street.

Placed in this diagonal position, the house and terrace are not crowding against lot lines at any point. In its position, between the house and garage, and tucked somewhat into the side of the hill and the surrounding foliage, the terrace, as an outdoor living area, has a privacy it might not otherwise have.

But these are not the whole explanation of this "magic." The planning of this site was not produced by the kind of "common sense" that sees and accepts a bulldozer as the practical solution to all problems of site planning. Bulldozer thinking (demolishing a problem instead of solving it) does make for shortcuts and for short-term economies.

It is easier to place the stock-plan house upon a piece of ground if one doesn't have to worry about saving (or possibly taking advantage of) several shade trees or some other natural feature of the site. It is cheaper to build a house on level ground, even if it is a raw clay step gouged into the side of a hill. This kind of practicality ignores the fact that saplings are not a replacement for full-grown trees and that money and time are required to heal those hillside wounds.

This "magic" is the product of a different kind of "common sense" that sees natural values as real values which, once destroyed, are not quickly or easily replaced. It is the product of a sensitivity to, and a deep, almost affectionate regard for, landscape and its beauties. It does not come from an unfeeling and materialistic attitude toward nature as so much raw material or real-estate to be exploited.

It comes from a mind that sees man in inter-dependent and interactive relations with nature.

It is this kind of thinking, seeking for quality in living, that produces genuine quality in environment. It is a real concern not with superficial appearances and effects but with those details that make living itself more deeply satisfying.

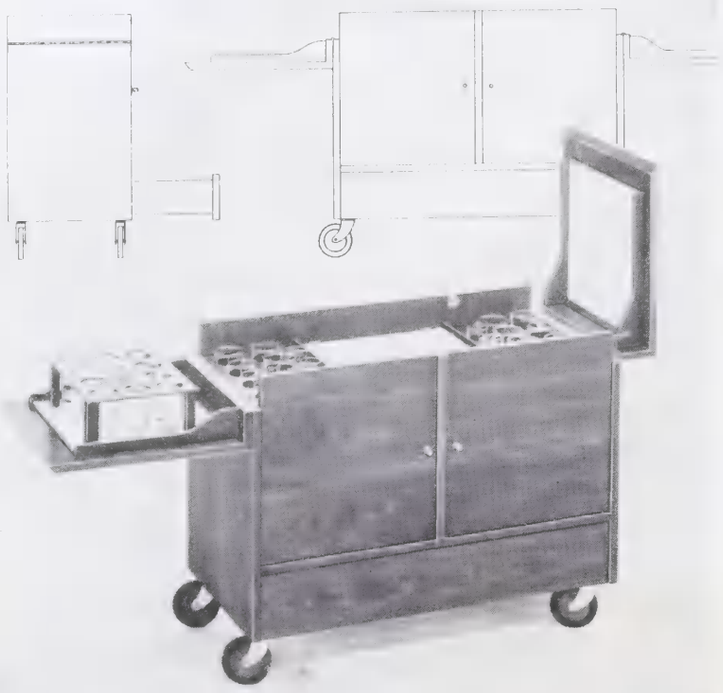
Be sure to read the November issue of House Beautiful



It can completely change your attitude toward every house you see, give personal significance to everything you look at, wherever you are.
In its pages we discuss these provocative questions:

- How personal should your house be?
- What can you learn from other people's houses?
- What's the difference between imitation and inspiration?
- What steps must you take to achieve individuality in your home?

You'll find the answers exemplified in three extraordinary homes, all of them utterly unlike, yet each deserving your careful study, whether your own home is small or large, casual or elegant.
This issue is, in effect, a restatement of House Beautiful's editorial credo.
It will show you how to get the greatest value and the most practical help from every issue of House Beautiful we publish.

The tightly consistent development of the theme of squares and rectangles is carried through to the smallest things. The bookshelves follow the joints in block wall; the cutouts for cove lights are square; even the air-conditioning grilles repeat the motif. Deck over TV echoes entrance trellis.

Dressing counter in master bath repeats the square in "dropped," overhead ceiling that recalls the trellage at front entrance. Even in small spaces effort was made to create airy effect overhead.

In the design of the Coonley house (Riverside, Ill.), built early in Mr. Wright's career, he used the square as the basic form ingredient. So the square occurs both in the over-all plan and in the ornament, making a rich, imaginative brocade of the whole by the varied ways in which it is used: in the light fixture at the center of the photo, the grillwork of the windows at lower left, and in the abstract, flower-like patterns made with tiles set in the plaster surface of the wall above. All is organized within one design framework, giving cohesion to all.

To qualify the lower edge of this roof fascia of wood, a narrow board, cut at regular intervals with a router, was used. The result, as both silhouette against the sky and as light and shadow, is a more agreeable relationship of the building to sky.

Three names that help make a gift important: yours...a fine store's...Gorham's

Yours, of course, is the most welcome name. But the other two help immeasurably to confirm your good taste and to express your good wishes.

Gorham, as you know, is synonymous with the finest in solid silver, and offers you a wide variety of handsome gifts. Many of them cost less than ten dollars.

Your jeweler will give you interesting gift suggestions, in the recipient's sterling pattern, if you wish. And if you are pressed for time, you can order by phone.

Naturally, your gifts have an added elegance in a beautifully wrapped package from a fine store.

ART SEMINARS

UNDER THE DIRECTION OF THE

A BRIEF SYLLABUS . . . to indicate the variety and scope of the course

PORTFOLIO 1
WHAT IS A PAINTING?
General principles of art appreciation. Why various artists chose to paint as they did. An introduction to "modern art" and how to evaluate it.

PORTFOLIO 2
REALISM: The Painter and the World Around Us
Visual, emotional, intellectual elements. How painting is not merely an imitation of the world but an interpretation. Different forms of "realism" throughout art history.

PORTFOLIO 3
EXPRESSIONISM: The Painter and the World He Creates
The modern "expressionist movement." Why certain painters departed from realism. How an understanding of expressionist principles brings new meaning to whole areas of painting.

PORTFOLIO 4
ABSTRACTION: The Painter and the World We Never See Similarities between an old master and an abstract master painting the same subject. Abstract principles that lie beneath realistic surfaces of some world-famous paintings. How to understand the extreme moderns.

PORTFOLIO 5
COMPOSITION: Pictures as Patterns
Pictorial composition considered in detail. Triple function of composition: decorative, structural, expressive.

PORTFOLIO 6
COMPOSITION: Pictures as Structures
How perspective and related devices create space in flat [illegible] relationships. Analyses of the compositions of [illegible] famous paintings.

PORTFOLIO 7
COMPOSITION: Arrangement as Expression
Twelve paintings in which composition follows no rules but nevertheless solves specific problems. Composition as a means of telling a story, pointing a moral, expressing a mood.

PORTFOLIO 8
TECHNIQUES: Fresco
This and the next two portfolios discuss the medium in which a painter works. Frescoes are discussed here: mural paintings of ancient Rome and China; revival of fresco painting in this century.

PORTFOLIO 9
TECHNIQUES: Tempera and Oil
Advantages of tempera. Transition from tempera to oil; its effect in widening the expressive range of painting. Techniques of Titian, Rembrandt, others.

PORTFOLIO 10
TECHNIQUES: Water Color, Pastel and Prints
Various types of prints; Japanese, Chinese, medieval and modern woodcuts — with many examples. Rembrandt etchings; aquatints; lithographs by Toulouse-Lautrec and others.

PORTFOLIO 11
THE ARTIST AS A SOCIAL CRITIC
Function of the artist in the world. How artists have expressed their ideas, protested against injustice, commented on man's folly and achievements. Allegory and symbolism analyzed.

PORTFOLIO 12
THE ARTIST AS A VISIONARY
Lyric painters among old and modern masters. Raw materials of an artist's visions. Twelve paintings analyzed and clarified from this point of view.

THE IDEA: A well-rounded course of twelve lectures in which the whole family can participate separately or together whenever time permits . . . you learn by comparison among paintings, utilizing 144 large full-color reproductions of great works . . . it is like being conducted, at your convenience, through all the world's great museums with careful, experienced lecturers who point out the fundamental things to look for in every painting.

MANY otherwise cultivated persons seem to have a blind spot with respect to painting. They can stand before a famous work of art and see nothing beyond what the painting is "about." Frequently they are unsure of that. If asked to comment, they are tongue-tied and embarrassed. They seem to have been cut off, in some way, from a rare form of pleasure they surely ought to be able to enjoy as much as other people.

WHAT IS WRONG? Can it be that the art of painting is something of mystery? Indeed, it is not. Any person who suffers from this sense of bafflement has usually been completely without guidance as to what to look for in paintings. Either he has never had an opportunity to take an art appreciation course in a university, or he has never found it convenient, as an adult, to attend clarifying lecture courses at a museum.

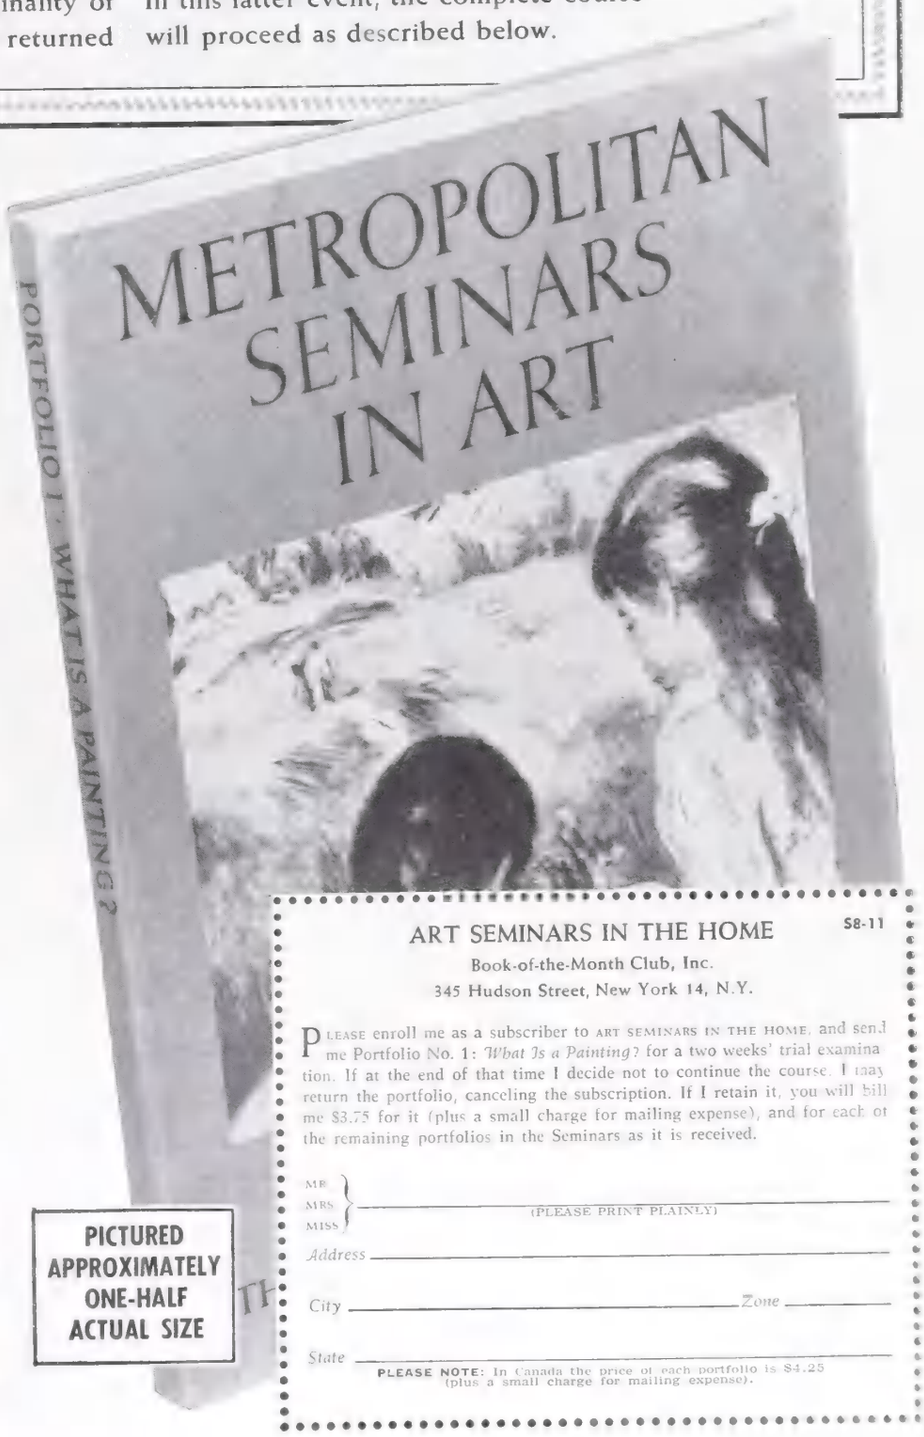
THE SENSIBLE SOLUTION • To help such people, an entirely fresh approach to art education was necessary. A program had to be designed to go into the homes of those who seek the full enlightenment they realize they lack. Also the program had to be thorough enough to achieve real results. These two sensible principles are the basis of the Art Seminars in the Home now made available by the Metropolitan Museum of Art.

ensible new idea: ASSISTED SELF-EDUCATION IN ART

IN THE HOME

OOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB

The First Portfolio sent for FREE EXAMINATION



...to acquaint you and your family with this new project. If, after "taking" the first lesson, you are not impressed with the clarity and originality of the instruction, the first portfolio may be returned and the trial subscription ended at once. That is, the first portfolio need be paid for only if it is kept. In this latter event, the complete course will proceed as described below.

EARNING BY COMPARISON AMONG PAINTINGS • Both in ontent and method these lessons constitute something unique n the field of art education. Each lesson comes in the form of portfolio, the core of which is the lecture. But in each portolio is a capacious pocket containing twelve large, beautifully rinted reproductions. These pictures are provided separately o that they can be compared side by side with one another, n order to clarify whatever points the lecture aims to illumiate. Thus they serve the same function as colored slides hrown upon a screen in a lecture hall. They have a great dvantage, however: they can be studied as long as one wants, nd also can be referred to over and over again.

MPORTANT FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY • Another great adantage is that members of a family can conveniently "take he course" either separately or simultaneously if desired—husband and wife, parent and teen-age child. Reading each portfolio aloud, and examining the reproductions together, is like visiting a museum together, pointing out to one another something to be appreciated and enjoyed.

A REMARKABLE RECORD OF SUCCESS • This fresh approach to art education, after two years of preparation, was launched experimentally about two years ago. To make sure that the unique method of instruction was sound and would be generally satisfying to those who sought enlightenment, the Museum allowed twenty-five thousand persons—scattered over the country—to take the first lesson without obligation, under the simple plan outlined above. Ninety-six percent continued with the full course. This would be an extraordinary percentage for any series of personally attended art seminars in any museum.

HOW THE COURSE OPERATES • One can enroll for this program of twelve portfolios just as one would enroll in a semester course in art at a university. The subscriber receives the Home Seminars consecutively—one every thirty days. The price of each portfolio is $3.75 (plus a small charge for mailing expense). It should be noted that this cost includes the twelve separate full-color reproductions, mat size 9½" x 12½" which come with each portfolio. In most retail stores each set of twelve alone would sell for from $6 to $9.

YOU CAN MACHINE WASH WITHOUT WORRYING

And this is the tag that tells you so. Because this tag means an electric blanket containing a blend of at least 50% virgin Acrilan.* And this means you can machine wash it without a second thought. Pop it into the washer, hang to dry, and that's all. It comes out soft, fluffy, luxurious as ever. Won't mat, shrink out of size or shape. Color true. Ready again for bed—just dial the warmth you want. Don't worry about moths, allergies, or expensive, "special" washings. How about it? Makes a fabulous gift, wouldn't it, for anyone—including yourself? Just be sure you see the tag.

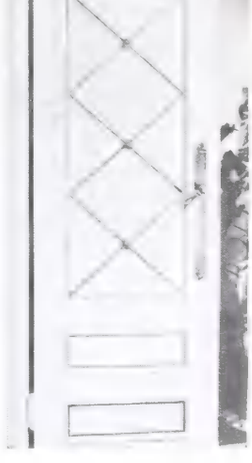
DECORATOR'S DIARY

A few clues to what's new in the home furnishings showrooms, from the pages of a decorator's notebook



I don't know whether to file the folders on Mrs. Sherman's new bedroom under S or under D for DuBarry. She's become so French Court since she bounced out her curly maple bedroom suite and ordered up a chaise-brisée and an antiqued ivory painted bed from Jacques Bodart. Not that I don't applaud the change. In fact, I led her into it, feeling it was high time for her to slough off that pseudo-Early American décor since it never really became her. Hers was a case of a lady repressing her elegant, femme du monde instincts in a welter of homespun furnishings inherited from her mother. And how her husband used to hate those Priscilla curtains!

There were times during the project, however, when her enthusiasm for her new and sophisticated milieu almost got out of hand. As when she started reading up on the life and times of the Louis' and talking about being authentic. At one point it took all my powers of gentle persuasion to get her off a pink-satin-and-bowknot binge. After all, her husband has to share this chamber. Finally I convinced her that both he and she would be happier with a pale willow green damask bedspread, tailored instead of ruffled, and silk gauze draw-curtains of the same color instead of the devious system of swags and over-draperies she had in mind.

Striking another blow for Mr. Sherman, I urged that we forego looking like a little bit of old Versailles and relieve some of the frills with the more stolid grace of French Provincial fruitwood in the dressers and dressing table. I even achieved for the good man a handsome, robust-looking Provincial armoire fitted out with hanging space and tray drawers, almost a dressing room in itself.

But one of the lady's demands for authenticity amounted to a stroke of genius. The painters were at work matching the walls to the ivory color of the bed, and the room, to my dismay, was getting bleaker with every brush stroke, instead of acquiring the restrained rich ivory glow I had visualized. Pattern was so badly needed in that vast expanse of ivory wall and

GOOD SENSE FOR EVERY READING FAMILY

THE PURPOSE of this unusual offer is to demonstrate in a dramatic way the Club's unique Book-Dividend system, through which members regularly receive valuable library volumes—either completely without charge or at a small fraction of their price—simply by buying books they would buy anyway. The offer described here really represents "advanced" Book-Dividends earned by the purchase of the six books you engage to buy later.

✶ The six books you choose from those pictured on this page will be sent to you immediately, and you will be billed one dollar for each volume (plus a small charge for postage).

✶ The six additional books you agree to buy during the next twelve months will be billed to you at the members' price, which on the average is 20% less than the regular retail price.

✶ You have a wide choice always — over 200 selections and alternates during the year.

✶ If you continue after buying the six books called for in this trial membership, with every second Club choice you buy you will receive, without charge, a valuable Book-Dividend averaging around $7 in retail value. Since the inauguration of this profit-sharing plan, $220,000,000 worth of books (retail value) have been earned and received by Club members as Book-Dividends.

✶ More important than the saving, this sensible system can be relied upon to keep you from missing the books you intend to read.

BOOK-OF-THE-MONTH CLUB, Inc. A13611
345 Hudson Street, New York 14, N. Y.

Please enroll me as a member of the Book-of-the-Month Club† and send the six library volumes whose numbers I have indicated in boxes below, billing me $6.00 (plus postage). I agree to purchase at least six additional monthly Selections—or Alternates—during the first year I am a member. Thereafter I need buy only four such books in any twelve-month period to maintain membership. I have the right to cancel my membership any time after buying six Club choices (in addition to those included in this introductory offer). The price will never be more than the publisher's price, and frequently less. After my sixth purchase, if I continue, I am to receive a Book-Dividend† with every second Selection—or Alternate—I buy. (A small charge is added to cover postage and mailing expenses.)

Why the new Carlrim Disposer Bowl* makes any garbage disposer purr!

No kitchen can truthfully be called modern today unless it has a garbage disposer. Yet few people realize that efficient waste disposal is really a dual problem in which disposer and sink must be selected together for utmost efficiency. That is why the new Carlrim Disposer Bowl Series has been designed, as shown in the Carlrim Sink No. 832 RDB pictured above. Here, at last, is a sink that gives a garbage disposer its peak efficiency. See how, by moving drain outlets to the rear, more working area is gained. Notice how, by recessing and widening the special disposer outlet, waste is more quickly removed. Most important of all, the heavy rubberized undercoating on the bottom of each Carlrim bowl reduces sink clatter to a whisper and transforms disposer noise into a quiet, gentle purr! Ask your architect, plumber, builder or kitchen specialist to show you the sink that can't chip, crack, stain or rust—the sink that blends so well with any color scheme—the sink that has been "made to order" for garbage disposer installations. It's the new Carlrim with the Special Disposer Bowl available at right or left. Write today for Carlrim illustrated catalog No. HBS60 to Sink Division, Carrollton Mfg. Co., Carrollton, Ohio.

*Manufactured from the finest type 302 (18-8) nickel bearing stainless steel.

Pavane®

TOMLINSON

Many words describe Pavane. But few do it justice. It has been called "lovely, luxurious, poetic, romantic." All true. Yet, Pavane is much more. It is furniture that says: "people of taste and culture live here." It is furniture that confidently chooses its design themes from the best of four centuries and many lands, that uses nine different exciting woods in a new way, accents them with ten different, exclusive and original hardware designs. It is twentieth century furniture rooted in a classical past. The Pavane "Assemblage" is beyond mere words. It must be seen. And it can, at the distinguished retailers listed across the page.

woodwork. I was wondering what to do next when Mrs. Sherman unwittingly gave me the answer.

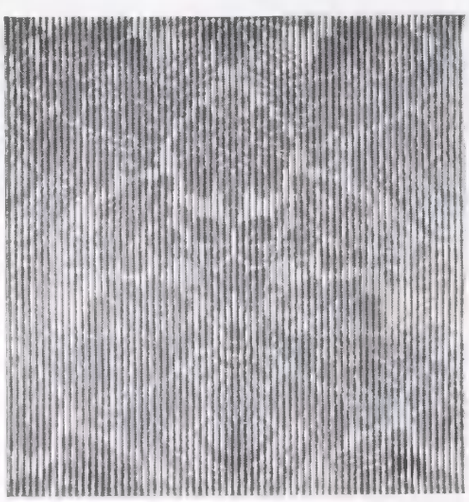
"What this room needs is some interesting doors," she said. "To be authentically French I can't have round doorknobs like these. We've got to get some of those handles like levers—the kind you see in the French movies."

"And what's more," I said, wishing I'd thought of this first, "whoever heard of a French door that hadn't some pattern on it? Why don't we order a custom-made door with a fancy bronze backplate and a lever handle and . . ."

"And have it painted to match the bed in antique ivory," said Mrs. Sherman, following through excitedly.

That is, of course, what we did, ordering three doors from the studio of Gery Hecht, a lady who makes a specialty of purveying to architects and decorators all sorts of custom-order door and window devices, from oriental grillwork to plastic panels with made-to-order embedments. This is the place to go if you have a piece of woodwork or molding you want copied. They can simulate elaborate boiserie in plaster composition or in trompe l'oeil painting. They can create room dividers, window shades, screens, and seem to thrive on projects that other workrooms dismiss as impossible to execute.

For the Shermans they did something that for them is easy as falling off a log—produced a panel door in the manner of Louis Seize, painting it with a diamond-shape motif adapted from the bed and picking out the molding in willow green. The all-important lever handle is included, of course, in bronze, with a slender pierced backplate. It's a way of underlining the French feeling of the room and at the same time giving the bland background three panels of pattern—on the doors to hall, closet and bath. The idea appeals to me also because it's a reversal of the usual patterned wall and plain doors—a trick that could be used in many rooms and in a variety of styles.



"IF you like it, why don't you decide on it?" I asked Connie Chivers, who seemed to have taken root in front of a certain fabric on Gene McDonald's racks.

Connie turned her violet eyes on me. "I love it, but I'm afraid of it—because I can't imagine what Mother Chivers would say."

Hereby hangs an all-too-common tale. Some of the last people in the world you'd call cowards haven't the gumption to follow their own hearts in decorating. If they haven't a Mother Chivers to cow them, they are overridden by the prevailing tastes of their own little set of friends. And now here was Connie the steeplechaser, the big game fisherman, the water skier, about to turn down her own choice, like a little girl afraid of her nurse.

The fabric did have an off-beat quality, but a pleasant one, like a joke in good taste. It was, of all things, a blue-and-white striped cotton ticking screen-printed with a purple floral pattern that looked like a tongue-in-cheek version of the impressively stylized bouquets you see in Renaissance damask. And I could almost sympathize with Connie's feelings. Because this fabric was to go into the dowager Mrs. Chivers' own winter house in Palm Beach where she had munificently turned over a room to the young Chivers, inviting them to decorate it to suit themselves. But it is tacitly understood

Now Air-Condition Your Home With Low-Cost Gas!

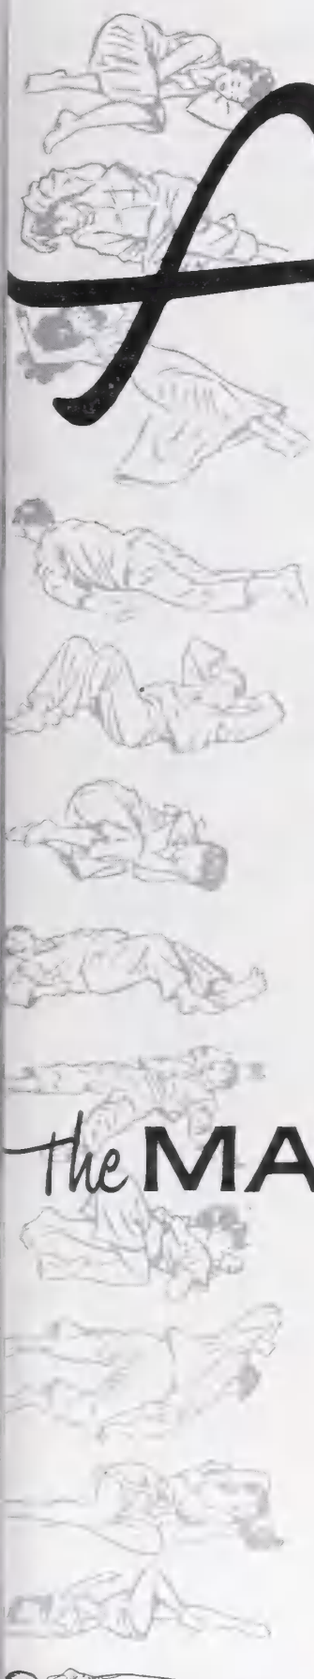
And—come winter—the same compact SUN VALLEY* All-Year® Unit becomes your heating system.

Now you can beat the heat—economically—with Gas. An Arkla-Servel Sun Valley All-Year Gas Air Conditioner cools every room in the house, yet keeps the monthly bills low—lower, in fact, than many of your friends may be paying to cool only one or two rooms.

And then, when winter comes, your Arkla-Servel provides the most dependable—and economical—heating system you can have. Your family will enjoy comfort they've never known before, with indoor weather that's spring-like all year long. Clean, filtered air circulates constantly through all the rooms at exactly the temperature you select. In Summer the air is dehumidified. AMERICAN GAS ASSOCIATION

Carefree Operation

Your Sun Valley is a cinch to operate—just or easy-to-set thermostat. A single, compact un cools in summer, heats in winter. And because works with Gas, there's no need for fuel storag no worry about fuel deliveries. Your Sun Vall provides low annual maintenance and long lif too, because there are no moving parts in th cooling cycle. In fact, you can compare the li of the unit to the life your home.



See your Arkla-Serv dealer now. There's a Su Valley available in mod and sizes to fit any hom Five year warranty.

Airfoam

the MATTRESS with a FUTURE

It's a fact—there's more sleep-bringing ease in AIRFOAM than in any other type of mattress. And here's why:

When you relax on AIRFOAM, it molds itself under you to exactly match all your body's contours. Not one small incurve or hollow lacks the gentle, up-pressing support provided by billions of tiny air cells encased in springy rubber-latex.

And because AIRFOAM is made from pure rubber-latex, it won't let you down. AIRFOAM stays buoyant, plump and trim. No sagging middle to cause wrinkled bedspreads. Because an AIRFOAM mattress is molded in one piece, there is no need for bothersome buttons and cords to keep it from breaking down or coming apart.

An AIRFOAM mattress—which never needs turning—sleeps cool because air flows freely through it. It stays clean, odor-free and fungus-free because it "breathes" with every pressure. Many sufferers from ordinary allergies find great relief with AIRFOAM.

So for wonderful sleeps—and for keeps—buy AIRFOAM. Only the ENGLANDER mattress is made with AIRFOAM by Goodyear. Ask your Englander dealer about his 30-day free trial offer. You just can't lose! Goodyear, Foam Products Division, Akron 16, Ohio.

Danish Comma Candleholders in Silverplate

Making decorative patterns of silver and light, these fascinating candleholders are a lovely, free-form shape inspired by the simple comma. Used singly at a place setting or arranged in groups, they are lighted points of interest. Tri-footed, handsomely crafted in the noted Danish manner, 2⅞ inches across. (Use slim tapers.)

A WHITE MINK CAPE is an exciting exclamation point at the end of all her other presents, because, of course, she'll save it for last. And this small cape of white dyed mink flanks, lined with white crepe, is a grand finale to her Christmas gifts. As flattering to a pretty woman as black velvet and moonlight, it's only $88 incl. tax. Harold Rubin, 943 Madison Ave., New York 21.

THE MAN YOU LOVE is the most difficult gift problem on your list, so we hope you'll like this desk set as much as we do. Each time he checks the calendar or uses the pen, he'll be reminded of his favorite girl. Rich black-walnut base is hand-rubbed to a mellow finish, decorated with wooden duck, brass name plate. 7½″ x 3½″, $7.95 plus 45¢ post. Downs Co., Dept. 1111, Evanston, Ill.

ROSARY BOX. When Our Lady appeared to the children at Fatima, Lucia asked if she would go to heaven. Our Lady answered, "Yes, but you must say the rosary and say it properly." As a gentle reminder, we show this ceramic Madonna-and-Child rosary box. Cover turns, window shows day with reminder to "Pray-Every-Day." 5¼″ h., $1. Religious Art, 6500 Mt. Hawley Rd., Peoria, Ill.

PICK A WICKER bell for its decorative possibilities. A joyful symbol of the coming Holidays, you'll use the 2″ size for gift packages, to spruce up wreaths, to tie on place cards at dinner parties. 12 natural wicker bells are $1.95 plus 25¢ post. Large wicker bell, 6″ high, makes festive door or mantel decoration. $1 each. Artisan Galleries, 2100 N. Haskell, Dallas 4, Texas.

TRUE SHERRY STARTS HERE

In Spain this Autumn, they harvested the year's vintage.

Around the little town of Jerez de la Frontera, they spread out into the sunny vineyards to pick the ripened bunches of grapes to be pressed into sherry wine. Only from these few Andalusian acres comes the true "sherry" (English for "Jerez," as you can see).

This year's vintage will be aged in wood for your use long hence. Miraculously, it will taste exactly the same as its counterpart today.

Meantime, it will be matured and mingled by transfer, little by little, at intervals of several years, through rows of stacked-up casks. This year's wine is poured into the top row, replacing older wine which has moved to the much older wines below. Many years and many minglings later, it is finally drawn from the bottom casks.

This is the slow "solera" system of Spain . . . descending through succeeding casks whilst ascending to perfection.

After the years have passed, some of the 1959 vintage will be "finos" (dry sherries), some "amontillados" (medium or cocktail sherries), others "olorosos" (sweeter, creamier).

It is the last mentioned, the precious "olorosos", that must be brought from Spain to Britain, for blending by an age-old art into Harvey's Bristol Cream. Only in Bristol, England, and only by Harvey's is this luxurious, mature wine bottled for you.

Perhaps it will not reach you for many years but when it does, Harvey's Bristol Cream will taste exactly as it does today, exactly as it did when Queen Victoria reigned.

BY APPOINTMENT TO HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II
WINE MERCHANTS, JOHN HARVEY & SONS, LTD.

G. F. HEUBLEIN & BRO., HARTFORD, CONN., SOLE IMPORTERS FOR THE U. S. A.

BRISTOL DRY®. Pale, light "fino". A genuinely dry sherry. Serve slightly chilled or on the rocks.
HARVEY'S AMONTILLADO. An amber-colored "medium." Serve as a mild cocktail, slightly chilled.
BRISTOL CREAM®. The years have made it more costly, more golden, more sweet... incomparable.
BRISTOL MILK®. Also a golden, sweet, "oloroso." Famous for 300 years.

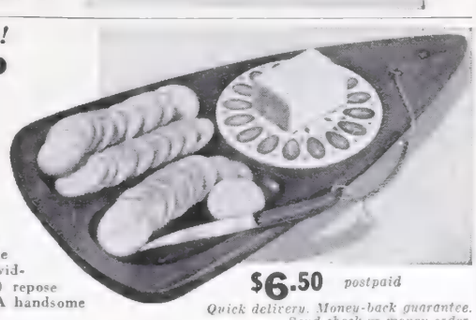
WHAT'S THE SCOOP? Leave it to those New England Yankees to dream up a practical use for the old-fashioned cranberry scoop. This can be used as a magazine rack, or it can be converted into a smart looking Hi-Fi speaker or a planter for greenery. It has cane front, comes in tawny maple. 19½ x 10 x 22" h. $29.95. Exp. coll. Harbor Light Wayside Furn., Rt. 6-A, E. Sandwich, Mass.

GIVE HIM A HAND that will rest smartly on a steering wheel, steadfastly on a gun, in the grandest twin gloves a man ever warmed up to. Natural tan Cabretta goatskin glove with separate camel wool liner, they're divine for "outdoor girls" too! Palm is rib-stitched for non-slip grip. All sizes for men and women. $8.50 a pair. Norm Thompson, 1805 N.W. Thurman, Portland 9, Ore.



HAPPY SLIPPERS are particularly good for exuberant boys and girls whose every move is as strenuous as a game of tag, whose every jump is as violent as a leap frog. Red, white, and black design is as gay as a giggle, and clown's hat squeaks when tweaked. Washable duck slippers have rubber sole. State age (up to 9 yrs.) or shoe size. $2.49 pr. Hobi, HB11, Flushing 52, N. Y.

A toast to cheese!

PAP BOATS were used in Great-Grandma's day in 18th-century England to hold food for tiny ones that had been prechewed by their mothers! This is a careful reproduction in pewter of such a server, found in an old foundling home in England. You'll use it for nuts, cigarettes, sauces. For conversation and collectors, 5" l., $4.95 each. Colonial Metalcrafters, Box 1135, Tyler, Tex.

KEWPIE DOLLS. Every small mother has a favorite child, and we bet anyone of these whimsical Kewpies will be it. The original doll was made in bisque in 1909 by Rose O'Neill. But today the Kewpie is made of vinyl, so she's a natural for the crib crowd. A doll collector would love one, too! 8" doll is $1.25; 10", $1.95; 12", $2.75. Mark Farmer Co., Box 573, El Cerrito 6, Calif.

FOOD WARMER SET. There's no pleasing a new baby, for he's only interested in bed and board. But you can please his Mommie by sending this 3-compartment dish and hot-water container in pastel blue styrene with Rogers silver-plated feeding spoon and 2-pc. educator set engraved with child's name. Birthdate. $4.95. Gift Engravers, 6349 N. Fairfield Ave., Chicago 45, Ill.

TREE HOLDER. If your husband fusses and fumes every Christmas Eve trying to make the tree stand tall and firm, you'll be glad you ordered this red, white, or green bucket. There's a steel pin in the bottom on which he spears the tree. He tightens the hand-forged strap around trunk, holding tree erect. 10" h., 12" d., $5.95. THIS PONY LEADS A DOUBLE LIFE

It's A Handsome Hassock . . . It's A TV Pony!

Order one for yourself and your children. It's ideal, too, as an outstanding Christmas gift.

Only $9.95, shipped prepaid. Send check or money order. Immediate delivery.

Satisfaction guaranteed or your money back.

Here's a new furniture creation the whole family will use and enjoy.

For you, it's a versatile, stylish hassock, designed and crafted to blend with modern or period furniture. When you're in a mood to relax, use this firmly-padded piece as a decorative foot-rest. When extra guests show up, use it as a sturdy, convenient seat.

For junior and his friends, just slide the pony head into the inconspicuous slot at the side and it's a TV pony. Its tough construction can take all the rough riding the young 'pony set' will give it. The kids love the realistic reins, to ride hard with their favorite TV heroes.

Upholstered in Jason Sealtuft material (the same as used in high-priced cars). TV pony hassock comes in soft black, or white, with fitted brass-tipped legs which screw into extra-strong metal sockets. Size: 22″ x 12″ x 17″ high.

WIREFORMER

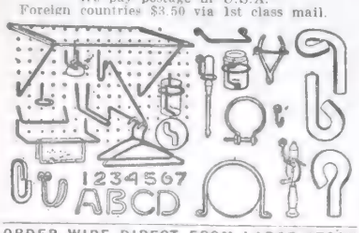
A NEW IDEA — A VERY USEFUL TOOL

IT BENDS

Any wire, any size up to 5/32" dia. in any metal —mild steel, copper, aluminum, etc. (piano wire up to 1/8"). This includes coathangers, coiled or straight wire, including 5/32" cold rolled rod.



IT CUTS

Cleanly and neatly, any wire except spring steel or piano wire. Wireformer will also straighten wire. With these combined features in one tool, you can make your own peg board hooks, all types of hangers, clamps, handles, braces, chains, racks, shelf and equipment brackets, mobiles, letters, numerals, or any shape you want.

A simple, precision made, vise held tool of innumerable uses. Forms ▭ eye of 3/16" inside diameter (just right for any nail, screw, or bolt up to that size). No pliers needed. Wireformer does the work with the pressure of one finger. Straightens the wire if you make a mistake. Cuts the wire just where you want it. Fits in your pocket. Case hardened, plated, with ■ plastic handle. Forms any angle, arc, or circle. Bends both right and left. Opens ■ whole new field of endeavor for anyone who makes or fixes things. Wireformer is a tool a woman or a child can use, and it's safe. You need a vise, but the dime-store variety will do. You have never seen anything like it before. We guarantee you'll love it, or your money back. Very complete instructions for precision forming, (fully illustrated), special adapter for small size wire, and brochure showing many things you can make included. Wireformer is the most useful tool you can buy for your home, shop, cottage, farm, factory, garage, studio, or wotavu. As a gift, it's sure to please. Three dollar bills will get you one. Here's the trim and tidy way to lug your logs from woodpile to fireside. This carrier is ruggedly made of 10 ounce, vat-dyed canvas duck and measures 29" wide to accommodate the largest logs. The extra width keeps dirt, dust, chips and bark off the floor. Carry it suitcase fashion by the easy-grip wooden handles which are securely encased in the cloth itself. Color choice of Brick, Green or Black.

JORDAN'S GENUINE VIRGINIA HAM

SMOKED 30 DAYS
THEN AGED LIKE VINTAGE WINE

NEARLY 300 years ago, Virginia colonists sent to England hams of a distinctive savory flavor that soon were acclaimed throughout the capitals of Europe. Both the fame and famous flavor have endured. Today, as then, the true Virginia ham is one of the world's delicacies.

Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms, slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, aged approx. one year, has been tended by hand through each unhurried step—as we have done for the past 119 years. These carefully selected hams are put down in dry salt in cool cellars for 25 to 45 days, and turned often. The salt is removed and the ham allowed to mature for three weeks. Next it is rubbed by hand with a thick coat of black pepper. Then it goes into the smokehouse to hang for 30 days and nights over hand tended fires, until the juices drip and the dense, pungent hickory smoke permeates and flavors the meat. Then to darkened aging rooms, to hang for months.

And finally, just before shipment, each ham (in a 40-hour process) is soaked, simmered, the skin removed, the fat trimmed, then glazed with sugar and baked with wine to a savory feast of firm, sweet and tender meat.

Ready to Serve

Your Jordan's ham arrives ready to be enjoyed, needs no heating. It keeps for weeks and weeks. Traditional for Christmas dinner... perfect for cocktail party or buffet.

Sealed in amber cellophane, nested in burgundy tissue in Old Virginia Smokehouse box (carving, serving and keeping suggestions enclosed), here is a magnificent gift, and a grand treat for your family.

We guarantee complete satisfaction. Weight 9 to 15 lbs. cooked; $1.89 per lb. (net cooked wt.) shipped anywhere in continental U. S. Shipped anywhere in world for $2.24 per lb. Please specify whether wanted now; for Christmas; or other date.

The CLEAN NEW look is here . . . in cookware

Presenting the newest of the new . . . new Revere Ware Designers' Group! Doesn't it date all other cookware you've ever seen?

The first to match the clean new lines you see everywhere now in modern appliances, Designers' Group is a revelation in styling. And a revolution in cooking efficiency.

This brilliant new cookware performs perfectly on any range—especially on the new controlled-heat units. The reasons? Flat bottoms, vertical sides, diameters closely matching heat units.

New Revere Ware is thick tri-ply metal—stainless steel with a unique copper core. The copper spreads heat fast. The stainless steel gleams mirror-bright.

See this wonderful new Revere Ware now. Clean, linear, compact and contemporary, Designers' Group leaves the past far behind. You'll instantly agree that it deserves a very special place of distinction in your kitchen. Designers' Group is made by Revere Copper and Brass Incorporated, Rome, New York.

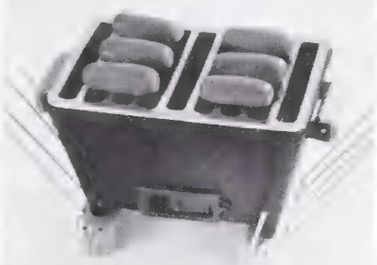
176 Cutting Edges of This All-Purpose

Gourmet's Carver

Glide thru ROASTS, HAM, FOWL

Actually has 22 "corruserrated" cutting edges per inch of blade!



Now—for the first time in this country—the revolutionary "corruserrated" Sheffield Carver with 176 cutting blades! Gives you WAFER THIN slices that retain ALL the juices. Sharpens itself as you use it!

Here's the most amazing Carving Knife ever designed for the pleasures of eating! Ordinary knives tear thru meat and squeeze the juicy goodness out—but not this revolutionary patented invention! The All-Purpose Gourmet's Carver is made with a remarkable 8-inch blade actually containing 176 cutting edges. This amazing edge has razor-sharp blades alternating with chisel-action ridges, with grooves to prevent clogging. It's unbelievable how Gourmet's Carver glides thru ham, beef, fowl, game—never disturbing the juices within. Gourmet's Carver never needs sharpening! Continuous use forms a constantly new razor-sharp cutting edge.

This is the remarkable "corruserrated" edge that actually flows through tough leather. You can slice WAFER THIN meat, vegetables, tomatoes, onions, etc.—make your dinner table a joy to look at!

Carver is made in England of finest SHEFFIELD STAINLESS STEEL with PERMANENT MIRROR FINISH. Beautifully white and balanced handle for sure grip and perfect slicing. Order NOW for luxurious dining at home—or give as most unusual holiday gift. LIFETIME GUARANTEE covering replacement or reconditioning WITHOUT CHARGE. Attractively sleeved and boxed—ONLY $6 POSTPAID, or C.O.D. plus postage. Extra-heavy CAPTAIN'S CARVER with 9 in. blade and white handle only $8.

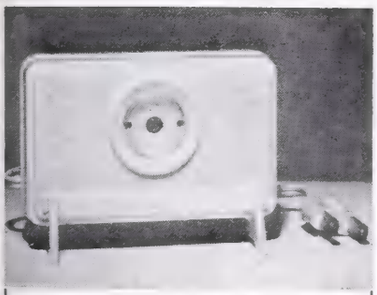
BOUDOIR BOOTS. Even if your legs are not à la Dietrich, and your boudoir is a far cry from Hollywood, we'll bet you feel like a movie queen when you slip into these softies. As downy looking as whipped cream, they're made of soft champagne glove leather, trimmed with tiny golden balls and braid. White or red. Sizes 5-9. $7.95. Old Mexico Shop, Santa Fe, New Mexico.

TWO-TINE WINNER. An elegant set of little forks have sterling silver tines and gold-plated handles embossed with a floral design. Wonderful for olives on the cocktail tray, lemons on the tea table, and hors d'oeuvres on the buffet. A bride would love a set of four. $6. Two sets, $11.50. Silver Craftsmen, 79-32 164th Street, Jamaica 32, New York.



80 CHILDREN'S RECORDINGS. Musical stories, games, and songs, sung and played by Uncle Tom, provide entertainment for almost an hour on this 33⅓ RPM, Long Playing Hi-Fi record. Each song, game, and story has its own instrumental or orchestral background. Colorful jacket. $1.98 plus 25¢ post. Hubbard House, Dept. O-127, 10 Melcher St., Boston 10.

SPUN GOLD is what you think of when you see this set, and it looks as if an angel might have spun it on a magic spinning wheel. Handmade in Portugal of sterling silver and then gold-plated, the filigree "Leaf of Happiness" pin and earrings are delicately wrought. Pin, $5; earrings, $5 the pair. Tax incl. Moroccan Art Center, Dept. H, 30 Rockefeller Center, New York 20.

WHY INVITE Prowlers & Burglars
To Visit Your Home While You're Away?

New automatic light sensitive switch will protect you and your home. Place Gateway switch on window sill, and plug in one or more lamps (maximum 300 watts). Lamps will automatically switch on at "dusk," and off at "dawn." No lamps lit during the day to signify your absence from home. No timing device to set or adjust . . . plug it in and forget it. Protect yourself when returning home after dark, and protect your home while you are away. Small, only 2½" high, this ivory finished unit blends with any decor, and will fit your window sill even behind a venetian blind. 110-120v AC. A very practical gift. 14.95 ppd.

The Art of SCRIMSHAW

. . . developed on the rolling ships of old New Bedford has almost disappeared. Only a few men still follow in the footsteps of the seamen who painstakingly and with great delicacy engraved the ivory from the whales they caught.

Our work is done in this ancient tradition, on genuine tusks and entirely by hand.

The decoration on each piece we show, is an old whaling ship. Links and mountings are heavily gold-plated. The ultimate gift for those you particularly wish to please.

FOLDING FOOT STOOL

ELIMINATES OBJECTIONABLE OTTOMAN. As an ottoman is objectionable in the average living room, the comfort of a foot rest is often sacrificed. When not in use this folding foot stool can be folded and stored under chair.

GIVES LEG AS WELL AS FOOT SUPPORT. It is more comfortable than an ottoman because it gives support to the calf of the leg as well as the heel of the foot.

FOLDS COMPACTLY FOR STORAGE WHEN NOT USED. Stool folds by releasing catch for storage under chair and for carrying around elsewhere where foot elevation is required.

STURDILY MADE LIKE THE FINEST PIECE OF FURNITURE. Constructed of solid cherry wood it is designed and finished like the finest furniture to give many years of useful service. Its simple design leaves nothing to get out of order.

In this New York producer's home, Heritage furniture is a living tradition

"The play's the thing" in this family. From puppet shows put on after school to Broadway first nights, they follow the traditions of the theatre. And the most cherished tradition in their home is their Heritage furniture. They celebrate every "hit" show with a new piece and they've just refurnished this whole room. They couldn't resist the details—classic columns, touches of color and Empire tracery—that prove the Heritage genius for interpreting the best of the past for now and years to come. When you know fine furniture, you can tell Heritage at a glance. And you will always find the Heritage hallmark branded on the wood or woven into the upholstery.

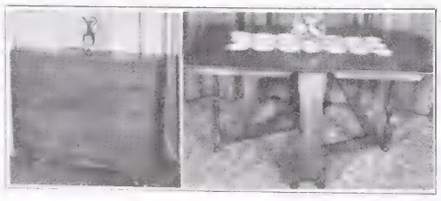
FOR REAL, RESTFUL COMFORT

The Fold-a-way Foot Rest



Put your feet up—relax the way the doctor ordered. The canny New England farmer who designed this foot rest over 100 years ago for a shut-in relative knew what he was doing because it keeps pressure off the calf! A boon for sales people, postmen, waiters, dentists . . . suggested as of value in the treatment of varicose veins, arthritis, fractures and many other conditions (ask your doctor). It tips to any position you choose—does not hook on to your chair. Mahogany finish. Folds for storage—have them on hand for "TV" viewer guests as well as for every member of your household.

Leading Medical Journal* Commends this rest for tired feet!

here for the first time anywhere– elegance with economy

Elegant Impala 4-Door Sport Sedan.

Here's new gem-bright beauty, new room to sprawl in and sit tall in. New lean-muscled engine economy, new spirit and silence in its going. For fineness of features, for precise craftsmanship—for all the things that make a car good to own—the '60 Chevrolet stands alone in its price field.

Just wait till you see it. Everything about the '60 Chevy, every styling accent, every engineering detail, has been polished and refined to a degree of perfection never before thought possible of a car in Chevrolet's price class.

Picture practicality and economy (there's even more of it in a new gas-saving V8!) combined with much of the luxury and hushed comfort usually associated with high-priced automobiles. That's Chevy for '60. Its overall effect is one of quiet elegance, a sophisticated new shape that embodies spacious inner dimensions. Space for long legs and broad shoulders, with sofa-wide seats and even more foot room for front seat passengers. Space that specializes in family travel!

Really you have to see this one up close to appreciate its fresh beauty and fine Body by Fisher workmanship. You have to take a turn behind the wheel to know its astonishing smoothness and almost total absence of road hum and vibration. We'll admit our enthusiasm's showing more than just a little bit—but once you've dropped into your dealer's we're sure yours will be, too. There's nothing like a new car—and there's never been a new car like this '60 Chevrolet! . . . Chevrolet Division of General Motors, Detroit 2, Michigan.

LIANG MEI NEEDS A GLASS SLIPPER

Liang Mei

An orphan, Liang Mei lives with a widowed stepmother in a squatter's hut, 12 x 12 feet in size, in which three other families exist. This is in a section of Hong Kong where three to five people sleep to a bed, with a population of 2,000 to the acre, where 80% have TB, 95% need dental care and 75,000 children are unable to attend school. Liang Mei begs for and collects garbage ten hours a day and acts as a baby sitter for two or three extra hours after she gets to what she calls home. It is true that she is not quite as bad off as some refugee children because she gets first pick of the garbage which is really pretty much what she lives on.

But she deserves a glass slipper because she is by nature a sweet, bright and interesting child. It would not be difficult to make a fine lady out of this little garbage collector. A month in a CCF Home and she would be transformed into "a beautiful princess."

Hong Kong, a British possession adjacent to Communist China, in 1947 had a population of 1,800,000. Today the flood of refugees from Red China has increased the population to approximately 4,000,000. The Hong Kong Government is doing a noble work in trying to assist these freedom-loving newcomers but the task is gigantic. Children like Liang Mei can be "adopted" and admitted to the nine CCF Homes in Hong Kong, which include Children's Garden, the largest cottage-plan Home in the Far East. The cost is the same in Hong Kong as in all the countries listed—$10 a month.

Christian Children's Fund, incorporated in 1938, with its 288 affiliated orphanage schools in 35 countries, is the largest Protestant orphanage organization in the world. It serves 25 million meals a year. It is registered with the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Aid of the International Cooperation Administration of the United States Government. It is experienced, efficient, economical and conscientious.

Africa (Central), Austria, Belgium, Bolivia, Borneo, Brazil, Burma, Canada, Chile, Finland, France, Free China, Greece, Hong Kong, India, Indonesia, Iran, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Jordan, Korea, Lapland, Lebanon, Macao, Malaya, Mexico, Okinawa, Pakistan, Philippines, Puerto Rico, Syria, United States, Vietnam, Western Germany, American Indians.

a Weldwood paneled room, the only ng you can spoil is your family

Wood like this doesn't just grow on trees. Weldwood puts it through 18 distinct finishing, sanding and polishing steps to make each panel as smooth and rich and perfect as a fine table or highboy. There's no wood paneling quite like it. You can actually feel the difference.

y room is for fun. Not for constant ng and redecorating. That's why od paneling is so popular for the here the family gets together.
with a houseful of kids, Weldwood never needs pampering. It resists
, stains and jelly sandwiches. Wipes ike fine silver, Weldwood paneling seems to grow more beautiful with rs. It's permanent. Guaranteed to your home.
l find that the only thing expensive Weldwood paneling is its looks.
od Samara®, shown in the room above, costs only $47 for a 12′ x 8′ wall. But, if you prefer birch—or walnut or oak or any of some 70 other panelings—Weldwood has them, too. Take time to see them at your nearest Weldwood branch showroom (there are 119 in the United States and Canada) or at your lumber dealer's.

Weldwood paneling—even if it's only one wall—can make your family room the showplace of your home—and your neighborhood. But be sure it's Weldwood—made only by United States Plywood Corporation.

The second most prized possession of Tommy Armour

Tommy Armour has written what amounts to the McGuffey's Readers of golf. Best sellers that preach what he practiced in his competitive days when the "Silver Scot" won just about every major title around.

The medals he piled up are his most prized possession. His second most prized possession is his Color TV set.

Tommy Armour is not the first sports figure to sing paeans to Color TV. For people in sports lead the colorful life. They travel first class. They like what's new and different. They live for action and excitement. And they go for Color TV because it's all these things. There's no more exciting way to watch football than on Color TV. No happier way to watch a musical or laugh at a comedy. It's the best way to watch any show, color or black-and-white. For Color TV is the finest television there is.

If you get a boot out of colorful living, we know you'll go for Color TV. Give yourself a chance to find out. Ask your RCA Victor dealer to arrange a demonstration of today's Color TV for you. Prices are as low as $495.

New! IMPROVE HANDWRITING

this simple, direct way!

GROWN-UPS! How often do you strain to read someone's poor writing? Top magazines recently said: "U.S. loses billions of dollars . . . from slow-downs, re-deliveries, missed bids, angry customers . . . due to unreadable writing!"

CHILDREN'S GRADES SUFFER if teachers can't read writing! And experts say speech defects and other personality problems often vanish like MAGIC, when child's written expression becomes relaxed and assertive.

It's almost easy to build good writing habits with the grooved PRACTICE PLAQUE! Adult or child sits relaxed. He moves "pen" easily. Soon his muscles feel and memorize the letters and numerals in pure motion! Results are AMAZING!

Wonderful EDUCATIONAL FUN!

For beginners, retarded pupils or "poor-to-fair" writers, any age.

IDEAL GIFT! Get PRACTICE PLAQUE. Satisfaction Guaranteed. SEND NOW!

Eye guidance no longer necessary. It's like the ease of touch typewriting! Simple . . . calms child's "difficulty fears" . . . pleasant, relaxed with fast progress!

Flower Fashioner

NOW you can make those truly lovely and enviable flower arrangements. The Gadjo Flower Fashioner, 3" sq. of strong crystal-clear plastic, attaches to your container, bottom or side; a patented suction cup and spring hold it securely and make your flower arrangements tip-proof. Even tall and heavy flower arrangements are secure and will not tip over. Perfect for those beautiful (and fashionable) floral displays in shallow containers, the stems go to the very bottom and get all the water. The crystal clear Fashioners blend with the arrangements and are almost invisible in water. They are a pleasure to use.

NEW MUSICAL NOVELTY FOR YOUR BIRD'S CAGE

Music LIFTS YOUR BIRD'S EGO!

Every time he admires himself in the mirror, PERCHA-TOON starts to play!

PERCHA-TOON will make your high-flying fellow an incorrigible showoff. It hangs inside his cage (but can be wound easily from outside it.) When your fine feathered friend stands on the perch to admire himself in the mirror, a Swiss musical movement starts to play a tuneful accompaniment. When he flies off, music stops automatically.

A NEW IDEA IN CHRISTMAS GIFTS with loads of surprises and excitement!

THE Treasure of Treats
NOT JUST ONE...
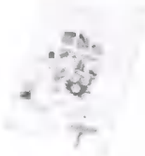
BUT SIX WONDERFUL GIFTS of California's most tempting delicacies

That package way up high under the cloud of ribbon, is a Mission Pak Fruit Cake – the only fruit cake in the world made with 90% glacéd fruits and nuts and only 10% batter.



On the floor below, there are four wonderful surprises. In the center a box of big, juicy, bright red apples. In the left wing box, there are magical Mission Pak Glacéd Fruits – cherries, apricots, miniature pears, pineapple and delicious black figs – glacéd in real orange blossom honey by a process that takes a full year. And in the right wing, a package of fabulous Deglet Noor Dates. In front center, a Christmas tree box of walnuts and almonds.

Down below, holding up this tower of treasure treats is a box of Mission Pak Oranges – so big they look like grapefruit! And the cost is the real surprise – you can send this gift to all the special names on your list. Nothing like it anywhere except by mail from the Mission Folk in California.

Only $7.99, gift wrapped and shipped prepaid anywhere in the U.S. with your gift card enclosed. Specify Gift No. 44. But order early because the supply is limited. Safe arrival and complete satisfaction guaranteed.

in this family that suiting yourself means first of all pleasing Mama.

Connie's choice was so appropriate to the big third-floor bedroom that overlooks the ocean, so personally becoming to the blond young couple who would occupy it, and so practical for a seashore room that I simply had to insist she defy the dowager. Besides, its Renaissance pattern was nothing more than a light-hearted version of the dark and dignified damasks all over the rest of the old house.

"We'll take 40 yards of this," I said to the clerk. And to Connie, "Just leave her to me." Then I ordered 10 rolls of coordinated wallpaper, which is patterned with identical floral design on a plain white background.

We had to work fast during the week our tyrannical friend was up in New Hampshire superintending the affairs of some other members of the family, but the job turned out magnificently. We upholstered the twin beds in the 48-inch-wide ticking, centering the 29-inch purple repeat on the headboards, gave the beds tailored spreads of the fabric, used it like roller shades on the eastern windows where the morning sun streams in, and upholstered two slipper chairs in it. We made three walls white and papered the fourth wall with the purple-on-white pattern and covered the floor in wall-to-wall shaggy cotton carpet in a blue that matches the ticking stripe. We crossed our fingers and painted the old chest of drawers and dresser white. The result was a most stylish look of complete coordination, and entering this room from the rest of the house was like emerging from a cave into sunlight.

The day Mrs. Chivers returned, we sat in the sunlight and waited nervously for her to appear out of the cave. And if you think she raised the roof when she saw the room, you're right. But her bitter complaint was that Connie hadn't told her about these changes in time to have the whole house similarly rejuvenated.

As a result of her daring, Connie is now actually calling the shots on the redecoration of the house. Her first job was to argue Mrs. Chivers out of using the identical fabric in her own room. She is using the same pattern, which is called "Frances," but the floral is printed on the ticking in greige. It also comes printed in green or turquoise or can be printed in any color you want if you order 10 yards or more.

I happened to be at Mrs. Baird's one afternoon, discussing the redecoration of her bedroom, when Mrs. H., just back from Spain, dropped by to drop a few places. "The hotel in Seville was magnificent," she reported. "Very elegant, very continental, very old world, but so rich and dignified. The ceilings of our suite must have been twelve feet high. It was like a palace. All the woodwork and the furniture were carved walnut. And you wouldn't believe it but every bit of hardware was sterling silver—doorknobs, scutcheons, dressing table pulls. . . ."

At this point Mrs. Baird and I looked at each other and it was clear we'd both been struck by the same thought. For Mrs. Baird had lately inherited a reputedly fine but certainly out-of-condition chest that her great-uncle had brought back from Spain only to let moulder in his attic. It was a miraculously made thing, with a carved front that pulled down like a desk, disclosing myriad little drawers that had pulls like curious lead pellets. The hitch was that we couldn't open all the drawers because most of the pulls were missing.

We'd been weighing the pros and cons of having it refinished, changing its hardware and using it as a desk-dressing table in Mrs. Baird's bedroom-sitting room.

"Do you suppose that hardware could be silver?" I started to ask, but Mrs. Baird had already darted off to find the silver polish. And out in the garage, with poor mystified Mrs. Hollingshead trailing after us, we went to work on the chest and discovered that the lead pellets were indeed perfect little hand-made ball pulls of silver.

"Oh, but we'll never be able to match them," said Mrs. Baird.

But that's where she was wrong. Because, although they are best known for their hand-made sterling flatware, the old American silversmithy of Samuel Kirk and Son, Inc., in Baltimore, can make to order or reproduce anything in silver, from a doorknob to a front door. They give such things a lacquer finish to prevent tarnish.

Having discovered silver where we least expected it, we've made the unusual old piece the pièce de résistance of the room and let its gleaming pulls suggest the gray walls, the gray-and-white Spanish rug and the silvery-gray raw silk slipcover for the sofa-bed. Lamp bases are silver luster and gold.

"I feel like a lady grandee," says Mrs. Baird.—M. G.

IT'S WORTH MENTIONING

By JULIE POLSHEK

If you want more than just any bar stool, this one by Cosco has "what it takes" to fill the bill. It can be a smart combination of metallic-tan frame with mocha-color Barko upholstery; or chrome-plated frame upholstered in smooth red plastic or Barko in yellow or charcoal, too. Sleek and graceful either way. Thickly padded; revolving seat 30" high. The fine quality synonymous with Cosco prevails; $14.95. Marshall Field's, Chicago.

A striking wall clock for the contemporary-minded; another is traditional in mood yet harmonious anywhere. The precision-engineered timepieces are by Seth Thomas. Portrait is battery-powered. Fruitwood shadowbox, white beveled mat, brass fittings on black dial; 9½" x 11" x 3¼". $45. In Accent, gold rim and metal grille surround black, highlight interesting outer shape. 12" x 10" x 2⅝". $19.95. Add excise tax. Macy's, N.Y.

They feel like real animals; truly enchanting. Kitten rug, 30" x 36", has downy "coat" of multi-gray hues remarkably like the real thing. One eye is pink, the other turquoise; delightfully whimsical. Teddy Bear, 34" x 35", has black and golden-brown cuddly coat; looks appealing, pensive. Both are fur-like, acrylic material that takes punishment. Skid-proof; washable; $9.95 ea. if you can bear to choose. Helen Gallagher, Peoria 2, Ill.

Moodlite projects decorative light patterns; dramatic on a plain wall. Altering fixture's angle alters abstract design. Remarkable tone contrasts are achieved with a single color; interchangeable liners for the pattern lens allow numerous color changes. Created by an ABC Network lighting expert. Convertible at will for conventional room lighting, spotlighting planters, a painting, etc. $19.95. Moodlite Co., Los Angeles 39.

LET HOTPOINT TAKE OVER!

New Hotpoint...the "do-it-all" Dishwasher

YOU DO NO PRE-RINSING, NO WASHING, NO DRYING, AND EVERYTHING COMES OUT SPOTLESSLY CLEAN!

Extra time with the children . . . more "family hours" . . . relaxation at the end of a busy day . . . it's all yours when Hotpoint takes over. You forget those dirty dishes, pots and pans. They're automatically pre-rinsed, washed and dried to a sparkling cleanliness, hygienically clean, and your kitchen's always neat as can be.

Hotpoint washes twice, with fresh detergent each time—rinses twice. The special second rinse prevents water drops from drying into ugly spots on glassware and silver . . . and there's a Special Utensil Cycle for pots and pans.

And Hotpoint holds twelve complete place settings—or all the dishes, glassware, cutlery, pots and pans normally used each day by a family of five. Its big bottom rack has ample space for platters and utensils up to twenty inches long, twelve and a half inches wide!

See the handsome Built-in or full-size Mobile Model both with Double-Deck Washing Action. In satin copper, satin chrome, three decorator colors, and classic white or adaptable to match any wood kitchen cabinet. So visit your Hotpoint Dealer and . . .

LOOK FOR THAT HOTPOINT DIFFERENCE!

ONLY HOTPOINT has Double-Deck Washing Action. Two water sources—one for the bottom rack and one for the top—send jets of hot water swirling to reach every dish—everywhere—washes each dish thoroughly—spotlessly.

...how we wished we could PLAY real MUSIC

...then we bought a

MAGNUS Grand

ELECTRIC CHORD ORGAN

no lessons... beautiful music

...the same day

Make the same wish come true for yourself just as quickly. You too will sit down and play entire songs beautifully, even though you've never taken a lesson or read a note in your life.

Everyone finds it equally easy to play the Grand. All you do is match letters like A, B, C, and numbers like 1, 2, 3, to keys and chords which are marked the same way. You'll be able to play every one of 500 specially arranged songs in 20 Magnus music books the minute you set eyes on them. You'll play classics, hymns, popular and old-time favorites, jazz, westerns, and holiday music.

Best of all, Grand music sounds so unusually warm, rich, and beautiful, its quality is comparable to the vibrato of cathedral organs. Only the Grand makes this tone-perfect sound because it has the exclusive Dualtone chamber. It harmonizes two variations of the same note for that special Grand tone, rich, vibrant, lingering!

See and hear the Grand . . . play it yourself. Notice the features . . . volume control, book rack, table and legs, sculptured cabinetry in three decorator finishes.

You can be sure of quality too. The Grand is American made throughout. And it has earned the Good Housekeeping Seal and the McCall's Use-Tested Tag. Here's what the impartial McCall's testing Laboratory says:

"EASY AND FUN TO PLAY . . . novices and experts liked it. RICH, FULL, RESONANT CHORDS, pleasant listening tone qualities. TRUE PITCH, EVEN INTENSITY . . . keys and chords are wonderfully accurate."

How to leave home and like it

A thousand years, yet only a few hours away from the modern world, Taracan Indians live like their ancestors on this sun-warmed Mexican coast.

The West Coast of Mexico—

America's unspoiled Riviera

By MITCHELL GOODMAN

● The long Pacific Coast of Mexico must be almost as unspoiled and beautiful today as it was when the first white men came to it. Of how many other places on earth can this be said? Some day this coast may become the great North American Riviera. Today it is what the French Riviera must have been a thousand years ago: only more alluring in its tropical calm and purity than anything this traveler has seen in Africa, the Caribbean, and the Mediterranean.

It is only an hour by air from the old colonial towns of the Central Plateau and from the bold new Mexico that is rising out of them. It can be traveled in comfort, even in luxury. Yet it remains, quite simply, the New World: fresh, abundant, primordially alive, strange, and a completely unparalleled travel experience.

Much of this coast is, literally, unknown. Except for Acapulco and the two or three other resort towns, it remains virtually untraveled, hidden for centuries behind the massive wall of the Sierra Madre del Sur. Until a few years ago, Acapulco was the only west coast port with a road connection to Mexico City. And today, a 150-mile stretch of road northwest from Acapulco to Zihuatanejo is all the opportunity the motorist has to follow the coast itself. (Please turn to page 287)

Choose a floor that will outlast your mortgage

Oak Floors will last a lifetime

Ever stop to think what part of a house gets the hardest wear? It's the floors, of course. Thousands of steps a day... from the scuffing of tiny feet to the pounding gait of the Man Of The House...will wear down and actually wear out most floors and floor coverings. But not Oak. This strong, tough-grained wood gives you both the most durable and most beautiful of all floors. Oak Floors don't show dents from weight of heavy furniture...and they just won't wear out!

Better than ever—Today's modern finishing materials give Oak Floors amazing resistance to marring and scratching. With just the least maintenance your Oak Floors will keep their distinctive natural beauty for the life of your home. The initial cost of Oak Floors is less than most flooring materials. Select Grade Oak Flooring, installed and finished, costs only $5 to $6 a square yard in most localities. And there is no replacement expense every few years, such as you would have with other, less durable floors. Ask your architect, contractor or lumber dealer about Oak Floors. Write for color booklet showing exciting uses of Oak, the floor that will outlast your mortgage.

House Beautiful NOVEMBER • 1959

How personal should your house be?

• Even the most desultory skimmer of House Beautiful knows the answer to this question. Your home should be as expressive of yourself as you can make it. When it is, there are undreamed-of satisfactions that result from living in an environment you have shaped.

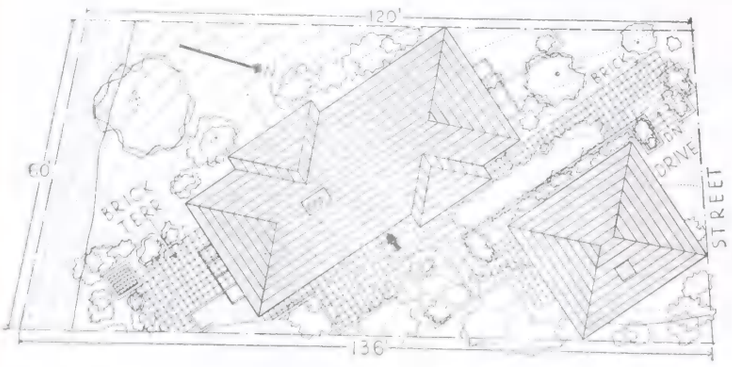
For your home is your main chance in life to express yourself—to allow to flower all those little differences that make you a different person from him or her. It can be as comfortable as shoes custom-made on a last molded from your own feet.

But how to make your abode a true manifestatiou of you, instead of a copy of other peoples'?

By looking at all the good houses you can—both in the flesh and in pictures—and then trying to understand how they are expressions of their owners' lives, needs, values, and pleasures. You should try to distill the principles out of the specifics you see in other houses. Reapply the principles so learned, but don't copy or imitate. To imitate is to kill any expressiveness inherent in you. To understand is to be inspired.

On the following 18 pages are two homes that are fine expressions of how two families want to live. Neither should be looked at as literal versions of how you might live. They are poles apart, but they are good demonstrations of the immense variety possible.

PHOTOGRAPH BY BRUCE PENDLETON



The indirect approach to the entrance, requiring several changes of direction as one moves toward the house, says that this is the house of people who prefer to live a somewhat sequestered life. It is private and informal in character as compared with the direct formality of more public entrances. Steps lead up to back of separate garage-studio. Entrance walk is hidden by foliage at the left of photo.

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY DOUGLAS SIMMONDS

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHER

The main living area (seen through the sliding door, opening to terrace) having several functions combined in one space, is indicative of a general attitude toward living: a desire for simplicity, a preference for informality, and the enjoyment of nature and materials used in their natural state.

OWNER:
Mr. and Mrs. Richard Wolford

DESIGNER:
James DeLong

Built in 1948-1949 for landscaping features and design fee.

Cost does not include land.

Design—not money—makes character

This house is small, but it says a lot about the owners' way of life; it is simple, private, informal, close to nature. Far from a rubber stamp, it was individually tailored to their needs, yet it was very modest in cost

● What principles are hidden in the homes of others? How can they help you? Start your understanding by analyzing this small house. It will almost certainly not fit your needs—no house is right for everyone. But you will realize immediately that here is a complete expression of a way of life—secluded, simplified in its daily movement, harmonious with nature. The architectural forms, the traffic pattern, the orientation on the site, the built-in furnishings, the decorative details all suggest a unified and highly personal approach to life. Understanding it can help you express your own freedom from the rubber stamp. (More on next page)

Since they wanted to live in a quiet and harmonious atmosphere and close association with nature, the house was opened outward to inclu sweeping view of the landscape. Materials, sympathetic in texture and

The master bedroom has nearly two walls of glass, with an outlook into a secluded and private grass lawn. Built-in drawers and bookcases, architectural lighting all contribute luxuries not commonly found in $16,000 houses. These the owners wanted more than expensive finishes.

Their desire for simplicity was recognized by incorporating into the structure a portion of what could be movable furniture (storage counter, bookshelves, and desk). Thus they become an integral part of the architectural design.

The fireplace, at the center of the living space, is the kind that welcomes the presence of a glowing fire and a few people gathered around it. Here the family, with a few friends or alone, can enjoy quiet, thoughtful conversation or recorded music.

They dine in this end of the living space. It is so very open and unenclosed in character that people seated at the table enjoy the feeling of being in the out-of-doors. Note how the simple forms of the built-in furniture and the materials used have qualities that are appropriate to this close association with the natural environment. The fixture, with wooden louvers in concentric squares, built into the lower ceiling, casts a becoming, dramatic light on the table.

With a minimum of walking and without going through other rooms, one moves about easily in this economical and well-organized plan, a two-dimensional pattern which reflects the particular, personal requirements of its occupants. The plan below shows the two levels of the ceiling, which are used to give overhead interest to the form of interior space.

They live in a small house, but they can enjoy a luxurious big space. They have no compunctions about one room serving several functions. The house has real character, unique at the $16,000 level

The key to the circulation in this compact plan is the central masonry mass, housing the fireplace, counter cooking units, and refrigerator. It acts like a hub around which the traffic flows. But it also effectively screens the living space from the cooking area. At the right and below, you see the two opposite ends of this 15-foot brick pier, and grasp how it separates without confining or making the spaces seem small and cramped—which they would if enclosed as rooms. This plan is a good example of how to have the benefits of an open plan without being too open. The meal-time mess of cooking would never be conspicuous from living or dining areas. Study floor plan.

Counter cooking units and refrigerator are recessed into the central brick pier, so they are not apparent from the front entrance or the hallway. (Study this condition at left and below.) So presence of functional necessities is minimized and the total space takes on a living room appearance. Cabinets of same wood contribute to this impression.

The traditional graces give elegance to this new environment

By CURTIS BESINGER

● Many people have justified the fact that they do not live well by saying they cannot afford to: they believe that money in the bank is the basis of good living. Perhaps they are unaware that many people with money live a poverty-stricken sort of life even though it is costly, or that some people with very little money somehow manage to live a very rich life. Perhaps it is unfair to remind them that how a person lives is a pretty accurate reflection of himself—of his desires, values, and aspirations.

At the core of every beautiful environment are people who understand the art of living. The good life begins with human nobility, with human sensitivity, with human imagination. As Frank Lloyd Wright said, it begins with the human heart. Without this, all architecture, all furniture, all environment is meaningless. And all of the gadgetry in the world is useless equipment. All of these things require people who appreciate human values and the rich tradition of living graciously to translate them into an environment which is in itself gracious and beautiful. It is their values which permeate and qualify their surroundings.

The bridge that leads from the entrance foyer to the living area, across the pool in which the dining island rests, is seen here as it appears to a person standing at the end of the living room adjacent to music room. This is a dramatization of the process of entering, a kind of "rolling out the red carpet," that gives a sense of importance to the arrival of all guests.

The dining island is seen below from a position near the end of the bridge to living area. The entrance foyer is seen through screen at left. This formal dining arrangement, resting in a pool of water, indicates not only an understanding and appreciation of the traditions of gracious living but the assurance and willingness needed to translate them into fresh new forms.

They use the grace and dignity of formal dining to transform eating into a significant occasion.

The dining area is seen above as it appears to a person standing near the living-room fireplace and looking toward the screen separating entrance and dining areas. There is a recognition, in the atmosphere of this room, that the qualities of formality can help transform a meal from the physical necessity of eating into an occasion endowed with meaning as human activity. Formality can be exaggerated to become a hollow ritual, but human life without some appreciation of significant form can degenerate into a chaotic existence that lacks even the instinctive order of animal life.

The music room, set apart from the main living area by the screen at left, against which the piano is standing, provides a place where the husband can pursue his interest in music. Its relationship to the living area also makes it useful as extra space when they are entertaining a large group.

Their library with its fireplace, its richly bound books, its wood-covered walls, and its comfortable furnishings reflects an appreciation not only of these things in themselves but of the particular quality which they add to the enjoyment of reading, quiet conversation, or watching television.

Unlike many people who need to use the impersonal environment of a hotel or country club to entertain a large group, the Grafs can entertain quite lavishly at home. The living room is seen in the photo above as it appears to one standing in the doorway leading to elevator, with the fireplace at his left. The swimming pool is visible through the screen at left. The music room is beyond the screen at right. The view below at left is of the fireplace end of the room. The lower right photo is a detail of grillwork. This is a room in which a small group of friends can be entertained without their feeling lost in its vastness. But it is also a living room which, with its adjoining spaces (music room, swimming pool area, dining area and foyer), will absorb a large number of people without ever seeming to be crowded.

People who understand the traditional values of gracious living are the essential element in making a high-quality environment.

Their swimming pool has the same high-quality furnishings as the rest of their environment.

The idea of using high-quality furnishings around a swimming pool so that it may be used as a part of the living space will seem impractical to most of us who are conditioned to think of physical exercise in association with low-grade environment. Practicality was the readily accepted excuse for most visually poor environments. But why not enjoy the pleasures offered by physical activity in an environment with some eye-satisfying qualities, as they have been in most high-quality cultures? The furnishings used here are covered with fabrics woven with plastic thread. They are not damaged by water and are pleasing to see and feel, making this a tempting place to lounge or have lunch.

To their house guests they offer the luxurious hospitality of a private suite of their own.

They may lounge in the sun on the paved terrace adjoining the enclosed swimming pool. The terrace is between two small formal gardens with planting planned for the best display during the months when the house is used. See plot plan, next page, for walls enclosing this area.

Guest rooms are on the main level of the house at opposite sides of swimming pool area. Vestibules at the entrances to suites increase their privacy, serving as a buffer to shut out any sound from the pool area. There are large baths and generous closet space in each suite. For extra convenience, dressing rooms for guests who have come only for swimming are at each end of the pool. All bath and dressing rooms, including powder room near entrance foyer, have generous marble dressing tables similar to that in right photo.

The master bedroom can serve as a private sitting room during the day. The sliding glass doors at the left of photo open to the terrace seen in the photo below and on the opposite page. The doorway in the wall beyond beds opens into area leading to wife's dressing room. Doors to husband's dressing room and to elevator foyer are in the opposite wall at each side of the fireplace.

The roof terrace, seen in a more inclusive view on the opposite page, provides a sheltered outdoor area near their bedroom where, in the morning, they may be served breakfast and linger over it in a leisurely fashion before dressing. Or where, on lazy afternoons, they may relax alone or with a few friends with whom they want to share the pleasures of food, drink, and conversation.

Their personal suite offers a quiet environment in which their times of rest and relaxation can be more richly rewarding.

The master bedroom is seen in the above photo as it appears after being converted from its tailored, daytime trimness and made up for its nighttime use. The seat cushions on the connecting unit between the beds have been removed making it into a convenient bedside table.

The terrace on the upper level, a serene place for lounging, is adjacent to the master suite which is opened to it through sliding doors, right of photo. It overlooks the garden on lower level and, with its hanging planters and trees in tubs, recaptures the romantic atmosphere of roof gardens in tropical climates. Circular beds of planting surround domes of skylights over swimming pool.

The plans for this house were tailored to the requirements of a family that practices the traditions of gracious living.

The lower floor level provides for those activities of living in which they meet and mingle with others, either a few or many. In the music room the husband can pursue his particular interest, alone or with friends. In the library they can enjoy quiet hours of reading or television. Their children and grandchildren, or friends may stay in the guest bedrooms or swim in the pool without intruding on the owners' personal world on the upper level. They may dine formally with a few friends or serve a buffet dinner to many.

COND FLOOR

An environment for their personal life is provided on the upper-floor level. Adjoining the large, central, master bedroom, also usable as a sitting room, are their individual and generously-sized bathing and dressing facilities. The dressing rooms are large enough to use for daytime napping or as separate sleeping rooms if one of them is ill. The terraces provide luxurious, shadowy, outdoor areas for lounging. Note such nice service features as the rooms for trunks and for pressing and linen storage.

The entrance court, reflecting the formal qualities of their way of living and entertaining, has parking positions for eighteen automobiles. When necessary it can contain twenty-four without becoming crowded. There are separate entrances to both the family's three-car garage and to the drive to service area. Gates in the walls surrounding the forecourt and gardens adjacent to the house can be closed during the months when residents are away.

Enter the wonderful world of Marinades

By FRANCIS KALNAY

● Marinating is an all-but-undiscovered province in the wonderful world of cooking. In America, that is. Nearly every other country in the world uses this method of getting more flavor and interest into their foods by soaking or saucing them with lively mixtures of condiments.

About the only thing that is comparable in the American cuisine is French dressing and/or vinaigrette sauce. Strictly speaking, these are marinades—and good ones too. But most people don't realize that they can be used to soak foods in. (Try soaking black olives in a tart French dressing for several days!)

In general terms, marinades are liquid concoctions of condiments and herbs to be used to enrich flavor by saturation. They can be used on meats, fish, vegetables, and fruit. They can do their work before cooking or after the food is cooked—like a sauce. They can be used as bastings, during cooking. They can even be used as a cooking medium for a short period of the cooking time.

Did you ever hear of anything so versatile? Yet this isn't all. For the marinades can add either sweetness, spiciness,

Marinating is an ancient art,

but everything you need is probably right on your shelf

The basic ingredients for most marinades are on your pantry shelf right this minute: vinegar, citrus juice, dry spices, fresh herbs and roots, sweets, prepared sauces. Even the special vinegars we show come from the simplest beginnings. Making them is part of the fun of marinade cooking. The ingredients are combined into saturating liquids that do their work on food before, during, or after cooking. They can add sweetness, spiciness, or sourness or combinations of all three. Start with any one of our recipes—you'll discover why marinating has been a basic flavoring technique in nearly every country but our own.

or sourness, or they can add combinations of all three.

Marinating can make a new thing out of an old friend, letting you discover new facets in your old favorites. They let you change the position of the food in the menu. The leftovers of cold roast lamb, after marinating, can move up and become a cocktail snack or a luncheon salad. It is a great technique for making previously cooked foods into forms which you couldn't recognize.

The basic condiment in marinades is vinegar or the juice of lemon or lime. But you can, of course, use any kind of sour or soured wine, citrus, or other acidy juice you wish. There are conventional spice combinations for specific marinades but the inventive, creative cook will make up his own bouquet.

There are hot marinades as well as cold; heavy, medium, and light marinades; quick marinades and slow workers; marinades for everything that's edible in the vegetable and animal kingdom.

Unless the marinade is for almost immediate use, it should be put into glass or earthenware bowls or jars and stored in a cool place. Naturally the best place to keep the precious marinade is your refrigerator. Any shelf will do where the temperature is around the normal 40° F.

The often-asked question, "How long will marinated food last?" dates from the pre-refrigeration era. It depends upon the nature of the food you wish to marinate, the strength and chemical purity of the acids and salts used, and the temperature at which it is stored. In general foods that have been marinated last longer, though this is no real problem for they get eaten sooner.

Some marinaders prefer to make their own flavored vinegar, which is a little less work and a little more fun than you think. (When preparing flavored vinegars, it is safer to prepare them from distilled vinegar because the acid content of the average cider or fruit vinegars varies. It is best to make up your own bouquet of herbs and spices for flavored vinegar and if possible to use cane sugar as the touch of sweetening.)

Take your choice of tarragon, garlic, celery, or any of the dozens of differently flavored vinegars. But it might be a good plan to have always on hand those that are most versatile. Here is one of the stand-by vinegars that I am never without.

Shallot vinegar

Crush a half dozen shallots and cover with one quart of fine commercial vinegar. Add the peel of one lemon sliced—for good measure. Forget about it for a couple of weeks, then strain through cheesecloth and your shallot vinegar is ready for work.

When in the mood for a more exotic bouquet, prepare one of our flower vinegars:

6 geranium leaves sliced in two or three pieces
½ cup nasturtium flowers
6 chives
2 tablespoons dry currants, 2 dry figs, chopped
3 tablespoons elderberry flowers
2 tablespoons honey

Cover with one quart of distilled vinegar. Keep at room temperature. At the end of two weeks strain, put in 1 teasoon salt and strain once again 5 to 6 days later.

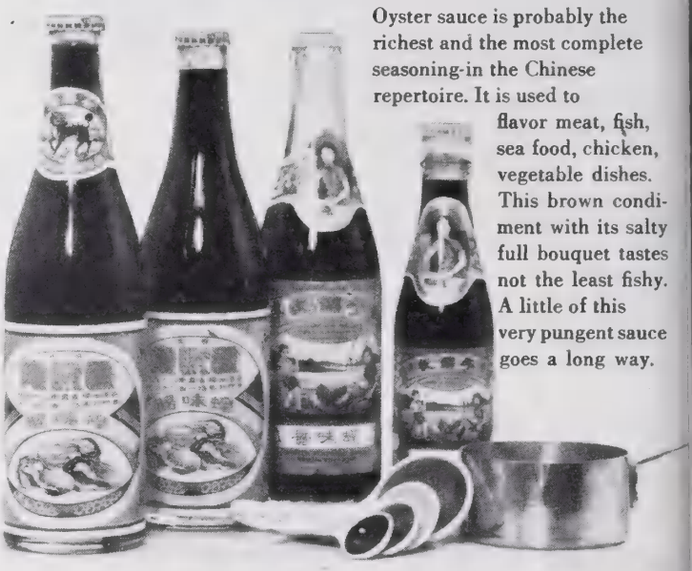
Soy Sauce

Imported soy sauce from Hong Kong or Japan looks and tastes like a good, salty, rich beef essence. It has a real affinity for meats, gravies, and barbecue sauces, but it also deliciously seasons fish, shellfish, egg and soup dishes, salad dressings—everything except desserts.

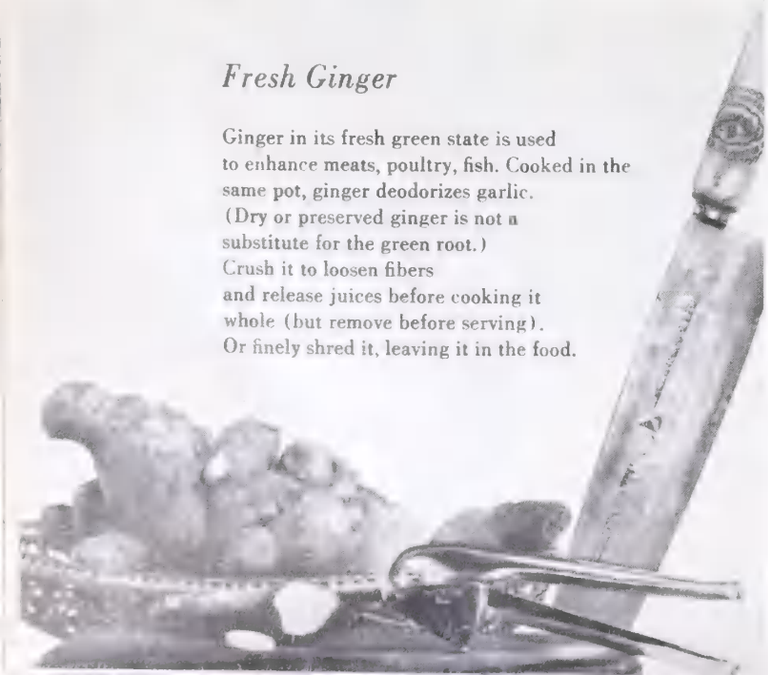
Hoisin Sauce

Composed of aromatic soy beans, sugar, chili, garlic, and salt, Hoisin's paradox is that it tastes like fruit. It is frequently mistaken for one of the Chinese plum sauces. For cooking roast pork and other meats, particularly hamburgers (see our recipe).



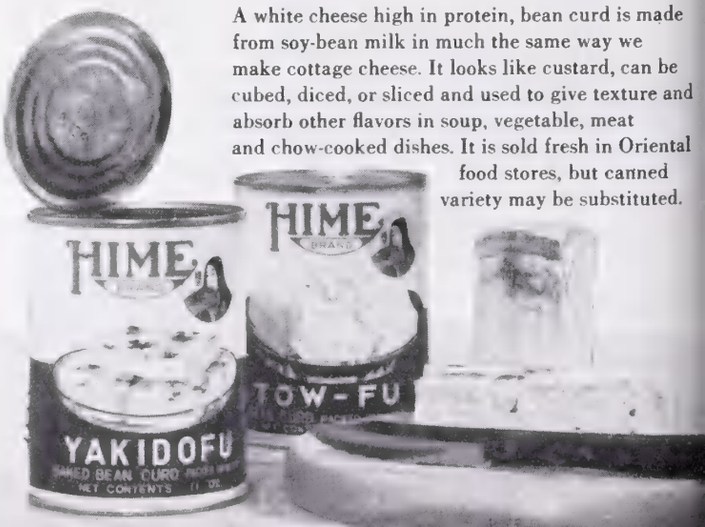
Sesame Oil

Rich, nutty, highly concentrated in flavor, sesame oil is not a bit oil-like. It is more like an essence. It gives spirit and wonderful flavor. A sprinkling of it imparts a lovely bouquet to soups, and it makes a mouth-watering salad dressing.



Oyster Sauce

Oyster sauce is probably the richest and the most complete seasoning-in the Chinese repertoire. It is used to flavor meat, fish, sea food, chicken, vegetable dishes. This brown condiment with its salty full bouquet tastes not the least fishy. A little of this very pungent sauce goes a long way.



Fresh Ginger

Ginger in its fresh green state is used to enhance meats, poultry, fish. Cooked in the same pot, ginger deodorizes garlic. (Dry or preserved ginger is not a substitute for the green root.) Crush it to loosen fibers and release juices before cooking it whole (but remove before serving). Or finely shred it, leaving it in the food.

Bean Curd

A white cheese high in protein, bean curd is made from soy-bean milk in much the same way we make cottage cheese. It looks like custard, can be cubed, diced, or sliced and used to give texture and absorb other flavors in soup, vegetable, meat and chow-cooked dishes. It is sold fresh in Oriental food stores, but canned variety may be substituted.

How to broaden your cooking repertoire

These nine Chinese seasonings work wonders with the most familiar foods, even using American recipes

By EPSIE KINARD

● The subtle syndrome of tastes that makes Chinese cooking popular with practically every nation of the world is no thing of mystery. And the ingredients themselves are easily available—if not locally, then by mail order.

For this Chinese cooking series, HOUSE BEAUTIFUL has tried to boil down the essentials necessary for the cook who wants to enter this wonderful new world. The nine seasonings we sponsor here are the ones, it seems to us, which give the greatest pay-off for both American and Chinese cooking. Once you've sampled them and tried them in a recipe or two, you will find new ways to work them into your old stand-by recipes. True, they are necessary if you want to do authentic Chinese cooking, but, more amazingly, they will help you add new fillips to old favorites.

If some of these seasonings seem exotic before you've tried them, just wait till you get them working in your own kitchen. Then you'll find them just as basic and indispensable as vinegar, catsup, paprika, Tabasco, Worcestershire sauce, or garlic. We'd like to remind you that we have already taken over several Chinese cooking ingredients: monosodium glutamate, peanut oil, and cottonseed oil, to name a few. And soy sauce is "on the (Please turn to page 300)

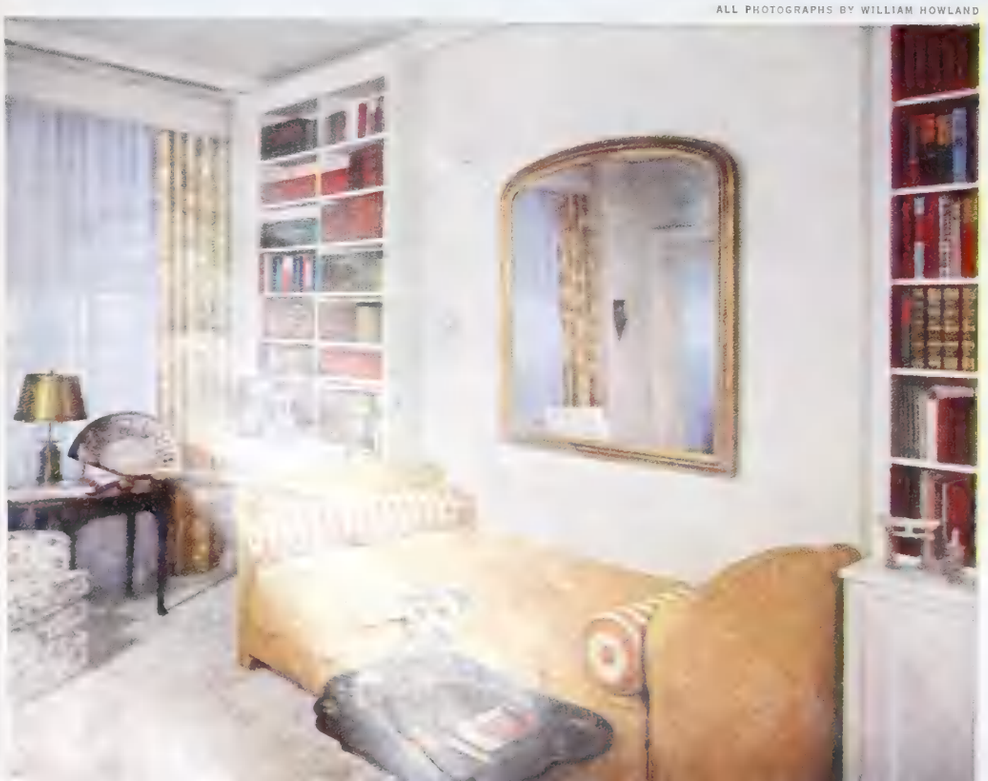
An apartment-studio that reveals the importance of souvenir hunting

By MARION GOUGH

● In a sense, the whole world has been the home of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Wallenstein, as it must be to any great artist whose profession requires constant travel. The present home of the distinguished cellist and conductor and his wife is the New York apartment you see on these six pages. But you might also construe it as a sort of distillation of all the places they've lived in and places they've visited during their married life.

It is a merging of their best-loved possessions from previous homes in the U. S. A. with what are, in fact, souvenirs from far-off places, garnered during concert tours. The result is an object lesson to all travelers, a demonstration of how one's peregrinations can enrich and personalize one's home. (Please turn the page)

The conductor's piano determined the living room furniture placement, for this apartment is both working studio and living quarters. Furniture is a blend of modern with 18th-century and French antiques, all fruits of Mrs. Wallenstein's collecting. White walls and draperies, feasible in the city thanks to air conditioning, make unobtrusive background.



An important souvenir, like this handsome Japanese painted silk screen, is the only kind worth a traveler's investment. Mrs. Wallenstein purchased it during a tour of the Orient because she could foresee how its beauty could be enjoyed daily in company with her existing furnishings. Small mirror-top metal tables are frequently used for buffet parties.

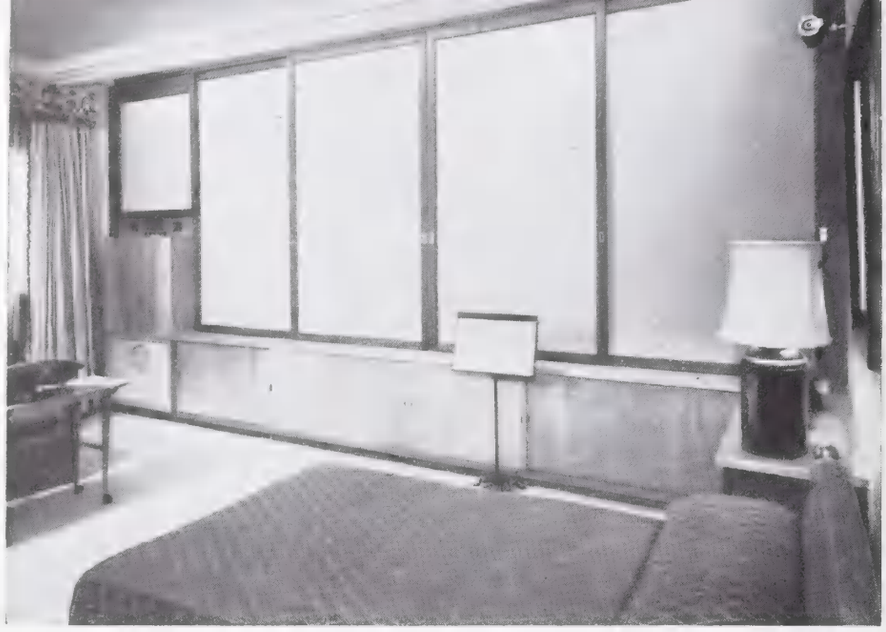
A Japanese screen, installed almost architecturally, fills one wall of the Wallensteins' tiny dining room with restrained but elegant pattern yet usurps no floor space. The affinity between oriental and 18th-century design makes this an appropriate background for the furniture, the antique English china and the crystal, which are also usable souvenirs, the only kind their owner collects. Dining room is small because most party meals are served buffet-style in the living room.

ALL PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

A collector's room is usually expected to look like a museum. But Mrs. Wallenstein, with an almost oriental appreciation of restraint, has furnished her bedroom with only a few, functioning souvenirs—a lacquer tray table, a gold-leaf mirror, Japanese china and metal bibelots, a French fan.

From many lands and sources of design, a traveler's souvenirs can make home more beautiful

In the Wallensteins' apartment-studio the kakemonos and the screens which create the background for their distinguished collection of 18th-century, French, and Early American furniture are souvenirs of foreign travel. So are the lovely bone china and crystal, and the occasional bibelots of ceramic, lacquer, and enamel, each a fine thing in itself.



These are souvenirs in the very precise meaning of the word—objects of beauty and dignity not easily come by at home, and since they can be incorporated into everyday living, they are continual reminders of places visited and enjoyed. All are major investments, none of them insignificantly priced even in their native lands. But wise travelers have long since discovered that you can spend less on a few important purchases than on a haphazard buying spree of inexpensive, obvious trinkets.

This calls for self-discipline. You must travel with your imagination open but your taste intact, judging each purchase by the same critical standards of usability and appropriateness as you'd apply to any purchase you'd make at home. Souvenirs of worth-while caliber usually take some seeking out. In the Orient, for instance, you're not likely to see the most important, finest objects prominently displayed for sale. These you usually find in the "back room" of a shop where the merchant secretes his most precious wares. We've found that this is also true in Italy, Mexico, Spain and the Middle East, and suspect it's true the world over.

A consistency of taste is the secret of all successful collecting, whether one's collections are made at home or abroad. The hooked rug in the Wallenstein foyer was designed and made by Mrs. Wallenstein for an Early American house they once lived in. An old French kitchen cabinet is used as a bar. Rare Chinese paintings are travel souvenirs. Yet all blend as if made for each other, reflecting a consistent taste.

But before you ask to see the best, you must ow what the best is. So, astute travelers nd what traveler is not also a shopper?) do ll to give some preliminary study to the in- genous crafts, the arts, and manufactured oducts in which their destination excels. It's study that can heighten the significance of ur travel experience every bit as much as perusal of history, maps, and sightseeing ides, for it is in the (Please turn the page) creativity of a country that you find the index to the temper and character of its people.

The Wallenstein apartment has an air so inviting and spacious that you may not have realized it functions also as a working studio for Mr. Wallenstein. His piano is in the living room. His bedroom, which you see here, is his office, practice room, library and research department. But with the exception of a desk, all vestiges of professional paraphernalia can be so concealed that at bedtime the conductor can shut himself free of anything that reminds him of his work. This would be sound psychology in the interests of a good night's sleep, even if the exigencies of space-saving had not demanded this double duty.

Industrial designer John Maguire engineered the highly specialized built-in storage wall. We see in it several workable solutions that might be adapted by anyone who has a storage problem and limited space.

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHER

Work room by day, bedroom by night, this room changes its function by the manipulation of sliding doors, hung on a ceiling track. They conceal practically every electronic device and filing system required by Mr. Wallenstein in his work. As the sketch opposite indicates, the depth of this built-in protrudes only 23 inches into the room. By careful measurement of space requirements of television, tape recorders, record player, and the master conductor's scores, recordings on tape and discs, and his priceless cellos, the entire wall is so engineered with shelves and compartments that it provides more storage space than many a larger room. It is also an example of upper wall space put to excellent practical use. A flat-folding ladder makes the higher shelves easily accessible. Far left, television set on a pull-out rack with a swivel base, can be viewed from the bed. Most of the shelves pull out, either as drawers or trays. Flat shelves are adjustable to accommodate albums of varying height. The wall also provides ample room for future accumulations.

MEET THE HEAT PUMP

– the refrigerating machine that heats your home

By FRANK J. VERSAGI Technical Editor, Air Conditioning, Heating & Refrigeration News

● You already own a heat pump of sort if you have a window air conditioner or an ordinary refrigerator.

Feel the warmth behind your refrigerator when it is running: better, notice the blast of hot air as you pass the outside of an operating window air conditioner.

If you could turn the window unit around, that blast of hot air would heat the room. Cold air would exhaust to outdoors.

Is it possible to make the window air conditioner heat a room without actually turning it around?

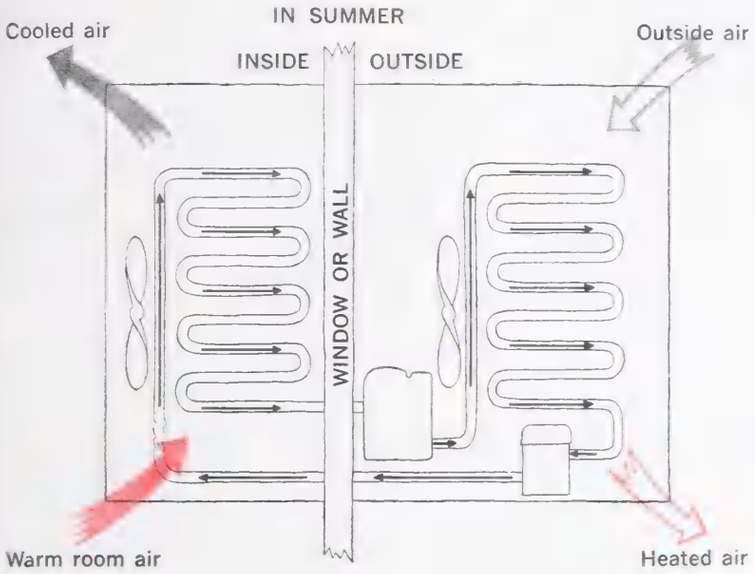
Yes. That is the secret of the heat pump, the single system that allows you to heat your house in winter and cool it in the summer with no fuel but electricity. (The name "heat pump" is very confusing; it could as easily be called a "cold pump," for it performs both functions. It is often referred to as a "reverse-cycle air conditioner.")

Clean, safe, automatic, and already extensively used in the South and West, the heat pump is now testing its strength against conventional heating-cooling systems north of the Mason-Dixon line. Practicable and reasonable only for expensive custom homes a few years ago, this year-round comfort conditioning is now being sold by the hundreds in housing developments—adding only several hundred dollars to the cost of homes in the $15,000 class.

And in those cases where central heating and cooling are not feasible, room units comparable to conventional window air conditioners are available to heat and cool add-on rooms, bedrooms, and basements already partially heated.

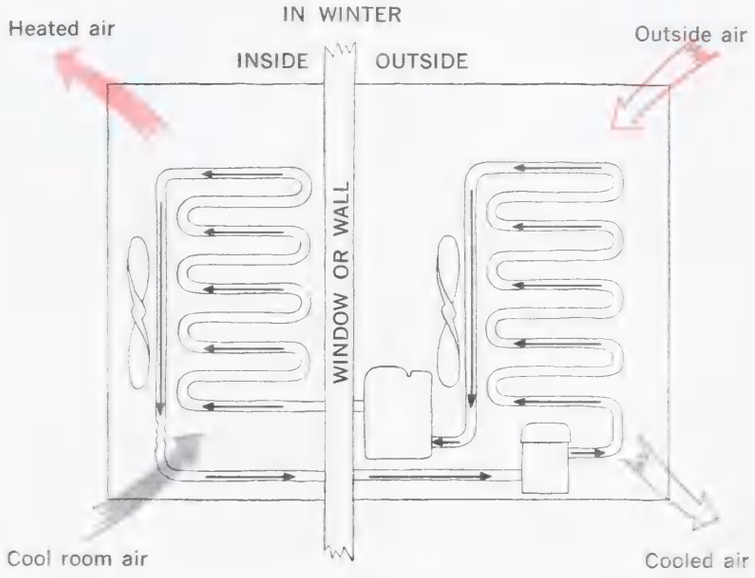
An indication of the growth of heat pump sales: Last yea more heat pumps were added to the power lines of one Florid electric company than were in use in the entire United State at the end of 1954. Some utilities are anticipating increase of 70% in heat pump use next year. Another indication: Fron 1952 to 1956 about six manufacturers were seriously workin with heat pumps. Now, there are more than thirty heat pum manufacturers.

About 40,000 homes now use central heat pumps. Som 250,000 more have window and through-the-wall heat pumps Why the sudden and rapid growth of this all-electric heatin and cooling?



Convenience, reasonable cost, pride of possession, all play part. Added to this is the enthusiasm of the electric powe companies for the heat pump. Until World War II, most electri utility companies had to cope with a winter peak. That is their greatest demand for electric power came in winter— actually during the Christmas-New Year week. The generatin and distribution equipment needed to meet this peak load le the power companies with unused capacity in summer.

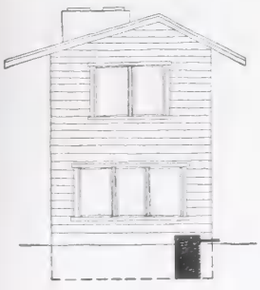
In the years since the war, the great increase in the us of air conditioning (cooling) has reversed this situation s greatly that power companies in more than thirty states no experience a summer peak and are looking for more winte load—a load which the heat pump can supply.



The homeowner's reasons for choosing the heat pump ar different in different situations. (Please turn to page 306)

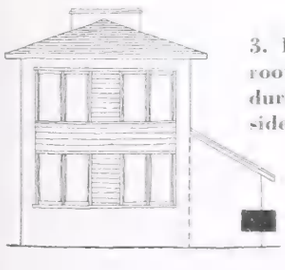
HOW A ROOM-SIZE HEAT PUMP WORKS

Every refrigerating machine (refrigerator, air conditioner, or heat pump) circulates a liquid refrigerant that boils at very low temperatures. In operation, it is made to change its temperature and pressure rapidly. As it is circulated through the two coils by its own pressure and by the compressor, it takes heat out of the air on one side and releases it on the other side. The refrigerant is never used up. It does its work by changing its state from liquid to vapor back to liquid, as it circulates.



In summer, the refrigerant enters the coil inside the house as a liquid. A fan blows warm room air over the coil. The cool refrigerant in the coil absorbs heat from the air. With its heat removed, the room air comes out cooled. Vaporized refrigerant passes into the outside coil as a high-temperature gas. When outside air (warm, but not as hot as the gas) is blown over it, the refrigerant is cooled, becomes liquid.

In winter, an opposite action takes place because the refrigerant flows the other way (a reversing valve makes this change). The cold refrigerant flows first through the outside coil. Here it picks up heat from the outside air (no matter how cold it is). Warmed, it flows into the coil inside the room, where it releases heat as room air is blown over it. These drawings and explanations are naturally greatly simplified.



THREE WAYS TO USE A HEAT PUMP

1. Self-contained central system fits in basement, attic, or closet. Ducts carry warm or cool air through house. Duct to outside supplies air to "outside" coil, which picks up or rejects heat by seasons.

2. Split system has one coil and compressor on slab outside with refrigerant piped to other coil inside. Ducts carry heat or cold through house. No other duct needed. Outside coil gets air from "all outdoors."

3. Room-size unit operates exactly like room air conditioner, but provides heat during cool season. With half of unit inside, half outside, no ducts are required.

SHOULD YOU CONSIDER A HEAT PUMP?

1 If you are buying a builder's house

If the builder offers a heat pump as an optional extra, check with your utility company and a heating engineer to decide whether operating costs will be reasonable. If so, you will get cooling equipment for only a few hundred dollars more than conventional heating equipment.

2 If you are building your own house

Check operating costs for your area, as above. If reasonable, have your architect design with the heat pump in mind using proper orientation, insulation, ventilation. Take special care in choosing a heating-cooling contractor familiar with installation of a heat pump.

3 If you already own a house

It is usually not economical to install a central heat pump in an existing house, unless you plan to replace the entire heating system. However, where the electric rates are low, use room-size heat pumps for add-on rooms or for cooling rooms that need supplemental heat.

discovered MADEIRA?

Suddenly Madeira is being seen around town. Pale, faintly chilled, and golden, it appears before dinner, or with the soup, or in a sauce Madère with the roast. Or rich and amber-hued in brandy snifters, it comes after dinner. After years of virtual obscurity, the wines that played such a proud role in American history, from early Colonial times, are being re-discovered.

In a circle not easily stirred, a New York hostess created a small furor recently when she invited a group of gourmet friends to a Madeira party from five to seven. Instead of the usual cocktails, she served six different Madeira wines—Sercial, Verdelho, Bual, Malmsey, Rainwater, and one that had been originally assigned to General Sherman. In keeping with the American tradition, only American delicacies were served with the wines—green ripe olives from California, pecans from Georgia, Maryland beaten biscuits, split and slightly warmed. And to go with the biscuits, a Smithfield country ham of Virginia, "sliced so thin you could read a newspaper through it."

Another startler encountered in Manhattan not long ago was a martini on the rocks, made of eight parts gin and one part of dry Sercial. The garnish: a twist of lemon peel.

With renewed interest in Madeira wines came a wave of puzzlement. For a Madeira seems to be, and is, not just one but four or five or more different wines. Does it resemble port or is it more like sherry? Is it supposed to be sweet or can it be dry? What are the different types? To get the answers, we traveled to Madeira itself.

Like Champagne, Cognac, Burgundy, and Bordeaux, Madeira is the name of the place where the wine is grown—a tiny Portuguese island, 360 miles off the shore of North Africa.

When first brought to Europe in the early 17th Century, the Madeiras were simply full-bodied table wines. Later, in order to make them more enduring, like sherries and ports, they were fortified with brandies made from the same grapes. But unlike sherry and port, Madeiras have a unique character because they are heated or "stoved" for some months, after they have been fortified. The process of heating allows the new wines and the brandies to have an opportunity to get to know each other.

In the early times, this acquaintanceship occurred naturally. It all happened in the holds of sailing ships when the casks were taken around the world. Then the rolling of the windjammers on the waves, together with the heat of the tropics, was found to enhance the flavor and bouquet of the wines.

The new method, now several generations old, recreates in carefully heated rooms some of the same conditions. Although the process may not have the same romantic appeal as the voyages of long ago, the effect appears to be much the same. During the heating, the temperature of the wine is brought very gradually up to fever heat or even as high as 130° F. Then, it is slowly allowed to drop to normal. For the finest wines, this takes about six months, thus simulating a voyage around the world when such a trip took at least half a year to make.

After the wines have been fortified, heated, and fortified again, they achieve a new status and are known by the gracious name of Vinhos Generosos, or generous wines.

It is then that the professional skill and the incredible palate memory of the expert blender goes to work. The generous wines of the year are first blended and then blended again with generous wines of other years.

In the early days of this country, Madeira was the great American wine. In 1665, Charles II prohibited the export to the colonies of any European goods not shipped in British ships from English ports. In a burst of generosity, perhaps, he exempted from this ruling the wines of Madeira. So these became the only wines obtainable by the colonists. Speedily, a love affair developed between Madeira and America that endured for two centuries. Practically every ship on its way to and from England stopped at Madeira to take on wine.

Madeira wine became as much a part of the culture of late Colonial and early Federal America as the cocktail is in America today.

In former times perhaps a dozen different grapes were used, but now there are four principal types. Each is grown in a special section of the island and has its own characteristics. Some are white, some black. From them are made (Please turn to page 313)

This furniture, adaptable to casual rooms, has a basic elegance that it comes by naturally. It is a descendant of French court furniture, shorn of excess ornament, its lovely, fluid lines retained. Leaves extend oval table from 54″ to 108″.

The form of this furniture is simple, practical. Carved aprons, curving cabriole legs, and gracefully modeled chair backs don't interfere with its function, but give it the softness moderns want. Desk might also be used as dressing table.

The return of the "country look" in furniture

● There are certain design forms that never go "out of style" and the ingratiating, friendly furniture usually called "provincial" is one of them. It may disappear from the popular market for years at a time, but meantime the connoisseurs continue to search it out in antiques or order it up custom-made. Eventually, inevitably, it returns to general popularity, as it is doing now after twenty years—not because manufacturers have decided to revive it, but because consumers are demanding it. For it has a hard core of essential beauty and a sound usability that adapt to the life of the times, generation after generation.

Today it is filling the need moderns feel for curved, graceful forms, mellow woods, and the eye-appeal of ornament—our psychological reaction against the straight lines and intellectualized plainness of more recent furniture. The changing social scene is responsible, too. This "country look," with its aura of warmth and deep-rootedness, appeals to us in a time when home has never been more a center of family activity, calling for furniture that is as easy to live with as to look at, and capable of mixing with the other furnishings we own. And as more and more people are moving from city to country, living a life which is neither purely rural nor thoroughly urban, they recognize how appropriately this furniture, with its combination of sophistication and simplicity, makes itself at home with contemporary country architecture.

On these four pages the provincial pieces, in walnut with beech frames, are Milling Road Furniture by Grand Rapids Chair Co. Division of Baker Furniture, Inc.

There's a look of substance, of livable solidity without heaviness, in this coffee table and the painted bookcases. Used architecturally, cases (81″ high, 45″ wide) enhance the country-house atmosphere. Upholstered pieces, Grand Rapids Chair Co., in fabrics by Boris Kroll. Cushions, Charles Bloom. Furniture that fills the need for elegance without fragility, dignity without pretentiousness

A good test of this furniture's appropriateness to modern living is the grace with which it adapts itself to the strong contemporary architecture and the eclectic mix of furnishings in this house, which we think is fairly representative of the unregimented decorating most people prefer in their homes. The cane-back chairs, opposite and above, are pleasantly compatible with an Early American table set before a 20th-century pass-through across the room from an antique American chest and a Chinese lacquer gift box (used as an end table above). There is nothing quaint or rustic about this furniture. The country look is one of substance, of unpretentious prosperity such as marked the homes of farmers and merchants where its prototypes originated. Chest design shows an Italian influence.

Sideboard below is ornamented by a pattern of drawers and doors—just enough interest to please a modern eye. Chair is painted. This Milling Road collection comes in light or dark walnut or in any of four paint finishes—blue, putty, lemon, ebony. All drapery fabrics shown are by Lavern Originals.

The emergence of high, wall-filling forms

The need for a vertical accent, an important furniture piece that will dramatize a wall or an entire room, has brought back these over-scaled units after many years of low, horizontal forms. More storage space is a happy bonus

The tall, highly functional chest for men is another rediscovery. (We show several other examples on page 292.) This one is of yellow birch with bands of red birch outlining the drawers. New furniture that works for you

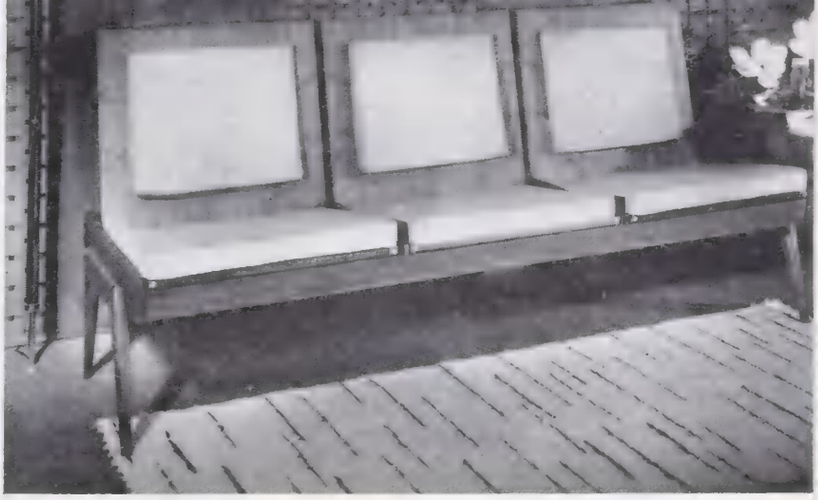
To solve some of your thorniest problems of space-saving, storage, and seating, here are new and ingenious furniture designs that offer unexpected function and multiple usefulness above and beyond their solid good looks



Wall-hanging units can turn an otherwise wasted wall into a home office or dressing room. These walnut pieces, none deeper than 11¾", compose in countless combinations. Here a mirror, shelves, cork-faced bulletin board, two-drawer unit, and cabinet with sliding doors, make a study of a narrow hall. They're suspended by brass hangers from 60" strips screwed to wall, and supported underneath by pins. Rug by George Wells. More about these units by Young Family, Inc., on page 308.

Opposite. A system of 72"-high uprights and interchangeable walnut shelves, drawers, and cabinets can give you a room divider and a great dividend of usable extra space. Sections (above) lock into uprights with brass pins. Drawer and cabinet units, 26" wide, open on either side. Bar (or desk, depending on the height you place it) is 38" wide with a plastic-topped dropleaf. Shelves come in both widths. You can rearrange the units as your needs change, adding or subtracting sections and uprights. Against a wall, divider becomes a storage wall, far right. By Young Family, Inc. More details on page 308.

Want to have extra seating, without the effect of a hotel lobby? Here is one answer. When closed, this adaptable unit is a low walnut bench with foam rubber cushions. With the cushions removed the three sections beneath lift up to become upholstered back rests, and the cushions are placed on webbing to become seats. Or two sections can be used for seating with the third closed and serving as a table top. Designed by Edward Frank and Bjorn Folkmann for Brown-Saltman Company.

The luxury of small drawers for individualized storage is often canceled out by the problem of finding the clothes you want. Here, because these caddy-drawers are made of transparent plastic, the contents are fully revealed when the sliding panel is opened. A separate chest stands at the left of this unit to match the four long drawers on the right. Designed by John J. Keal, the storage pieces are handcrafted in pastel walnut with a flat, hand-rubbed finish. Both chests manufactured by Brown-Saltman of California.

This walnut vanity extends only 18″ into the room when it is closed, but the drop-down front forms an ample counter when open. White laminated plastic lines the working surface, making it easy to clean. The lid lifts back to reveal a large mirror, four small drawers, and a shelf for low bottles and boxes. Matching walnut bench fits neatly underneath. It is covered with a wipe-clean white plastic upholstery. Sligh Lowry Furniture Co.

This ingenious service cart produces a working surface 56″ long and 18″ wide (left). Half is a warming tray that keeps coffee and casseroles ready to serve; half is walnut-finished wood for plates, cups, and other necessities. When not in use, the Salton HoTray is stored on the shelf of the cart (it can be used separately). Walnut top slides aside, the HoTray fits next to it and both lock together, left. Brown-Saltman.

It's a change, an unfamiliar prettiness, light in feeling as well as in color, after years of the sober-sided, darker look of wood finishes. But decorators have never overlooked the stylish potentials of furniture like this two-piece chest and cabinet by Jacques Bodart. Its tallness could create an elegant—and serviceable—focal point of blue-white in a dining room. Cabinet doors have metal grilles; chest has two silver drawers, a shelf, and a pull-out tray.

The fresh look of paint

The timely revival of painted furniture offers a variety of light, refreshing color to delight your eye and to enhance by contrast the wood finishes of your existing furniture. One piece might be the single accent needed to banish monotony in a room that lacks color and distinction

● They say that painted furniture is as old Egypt. Hardly a civilization hasn't developed in some form or another, from the lacquers the Orient to the fraktur work of German Pen sylvania. Proof of its staying quality and pere nial human appeal is that it never really disa pears for long. Right now we're seeing its retu in versions reminiscent of the elegant form it too in 18th-century France and Italy—cleaned flourishes, scaled and engineered to fit moder living, but still offering its traditional gift light, eye-exciting color. The pieces we show, b various manufacturers, are technically not painte but lacquered. Some are richly antiqued with streak-glazing in umber or gilt. Most can also b ordered in wood finishes, too. On these fou pages, see how the new painted look might re juvenate your rooms and refresh your livin

Painted furniture can add an eye-arresting accent to a room, determine a color scheme, and set off the beauty of wood furniture used with it. The pair of bunching cases above, in antique white with celadon green moldings, do all this in the dining room below, which is otherwise furnished in walnut. It is seen through a frame of celadon-painted wood screens used as a doorway. All furniture is from the Toulon Group by Heritage Furniture Inc. Used with a mahogany desk against a wood paneled wall, the lime-green brightness of this painted cane-back chair sings out in such delightful contrast that you see how even a small sample of the painted look refreshes the eye and enlivens a room. All the furniture on this page is from the Johnson Furniture Company's "Discriminate" group, and is available in a choice of colored lacquer finishes or in mahogany and maidu burl.

PHOTOGRAPH BY EMELIE DANIELSON NICHOLSON

A sure way to make a room look interesting is by mixing instead of matching furniture. Painted furniture gives you still greater insurance against the clichés of decorating, because its uncommon finishes and its range of color broaden your choice. The interplay between the mahogany table and the antiqued white sideboard and chairs makes this room a far more provocative place than it would be if all pieces were alike. Painted finishes are usually more costly than wood, but can be bargains in stylishness.

Painted furniture has always been a favorite for feminine bedrooms because it offers the delicious pastel luxury practically every woman loves. These pieces from Johnson's "Discriminate" group, lacquered blue and gold, also come in wood finish. Bed tables are marble-topped; without cushion, the bench becomes a table. Canopy is not part of the bed.

A two-drawer chest, like an especially rare and precious little jewel, is the kind of painted furniture you would make the elegant highlight in a formal room. It is flamboyantly, almost authentically, Venetian, hand-painted with delicate decorations, fitted wth a marble top and elaborate metal pulls. Available from John Widdicomb, through decorators.

The variety of designs in which painted furniture is now on the market bespeaks its popular appeal. While its forms are more or less shaped by French and Italian influences, most are so restrained that they might mix with modern or traditional pieces. Some of it, like this beige and gold group by Henredon, is designed to go together but there are no obvious "suites." Each piece is characterful enough to stand alone. It comes in fruitwood too.

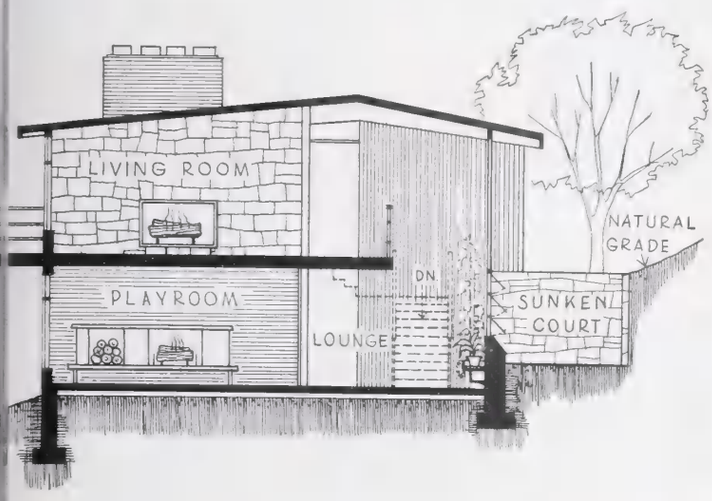
THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY BEN SCH

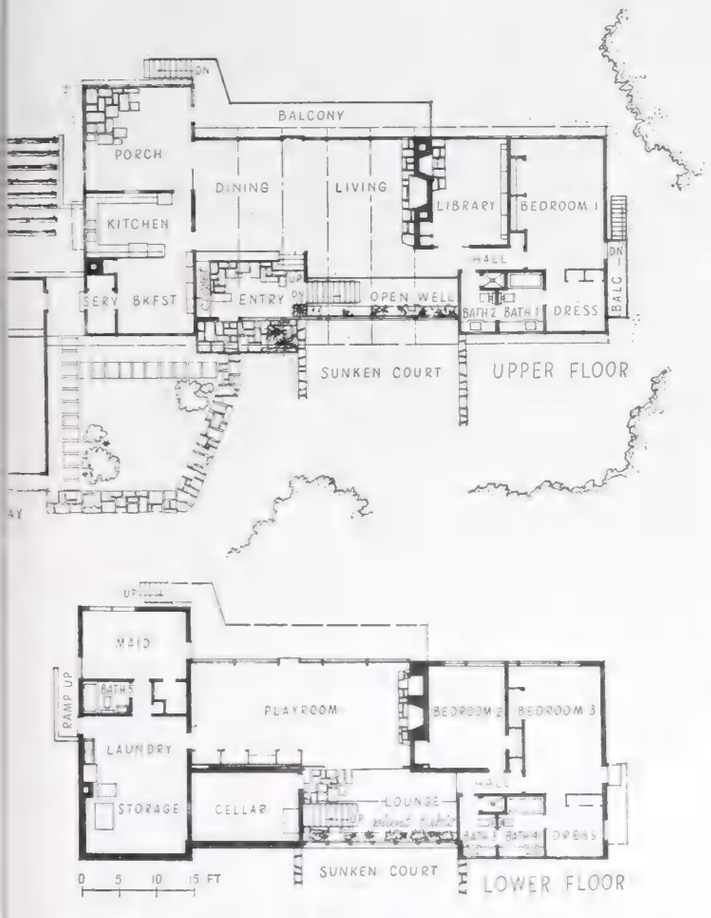
In the photograph above you are standing just inside the entry door to the home designed by Olindo Grossi. The steps down to the lower level are equally as inviting as the few that go up to the living room at the left. Both are living levels; there is no "basement" sense at all. At the right is a view from the foot of the stairs. You can see how well lighted this area is. The wall of windows extends the full height of both levels and the stairway forms an open well off the living room (seen in upper right photograph).

How to find livable space below ground



The enclosed space is there: the problem is to make it into a cheerful, inviting room. Natural light, and lots of it, is the key. Here's how two architects found sunny, full-fledged living space below ground—and how you can do the same in an existing house (page 270)

By GUY HENLE



● No matter how beautifully finished a basement is: no matter how cleverly it is decorated with barber poles, travel posters, and curtains covering non-existent windows: no matter how dry and warm it is, nor how high the ceiling, it is still second-class space unless there is adequate natural light, preferably direct sunlight. The tragic part of the story is that with so many builders using sloping sites, many basement walls are fully exposed above ground level (see examples at the far right). With proper use of doors and windows in these walls, it would have been possible to upgrade this already-enclosed space, making it suitable for all kinds of living, not merely a rumpus room. Even more of a crime has been the jacking up of houses on level plots just to achieve a split-level plan. All this does is emphasize more clearly that the buyer is paying for enclosed space that is not fully usable. To compound the felony, the inside stairs to this musty, cavernous area usually lead down from the kitchen, meaning that guests must wend their way through the busy work center.

Architect Olindo Grossi took a different approach in designing this house for Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Klumpp. Faced with a sloping site, he built an honest two-level house using a well-designed sunken court to bring full light into the level below ground. We show the stairs connecting the two levels in the photographs above. There is no feeling here of descending into the lower depths, yet without careful planning the wall along the stairs could have been completely below ground (see section drawing, above right). By the use of retaining walls, the sunken court was able to expose a full wall of windows. These serve not only to bring light into the lounge and to the playroom, but even more importantly to create a cheerful entry to this level.

These homeowners are losing nearly half the space they paid for, because their basements haven't the proper light for living

In this section drawing you can visualize just how much was added to the house by the creation of the sunken court. Protected by retaining walls, it makes possible the two-story glass area, a dramatic feature of the house. This brings light into the lounge and the stairway down to the lower level. No small bonus was the large and decorative planter which the owners were able to install along the base of the wall (see photograph at left). Natural grade would have covered most of the lower wall on this side of the house.

Floor plans for the two levels of this house show how entrance can lead to the living room or down to the lounge and playroom. Court is on the south side, gets winter sun.

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY RUDOLPH LEPPERT

Drawing at right shows how site was leveled with two retaining walls. Wall on upper side became the finished interior wall. Careful planning for drainage behind the wall and extra waterproofing made this possible. Concrete slab in main section of the house, flagstone floor in entry, and pool are all protected by a waterproof membrane underneath. Below, the dramatic water-garden entrance to the house is shown flooded with springtime sun. Tropical planting of all kinds can thrive here even during the winter because of the warmth and light. Opening to the kitchen can be seen along the edge of the door. Stone mass of living-room fireplace is at the end of walkway.

From the outside, the light well along the southwest wall is a distinctive feature of the house. Here, the summer sun shades are in place (see next page for how these work). They keep out the summer sun, preventing an overload on the air-conditioning system. In winter, these extensive glass areas are unshaded, bringing in enough warmth to save greatly on heating costs.

Bold use of glass in a southwest exposure creates a tropical garden, half underground, in an Arkansas home

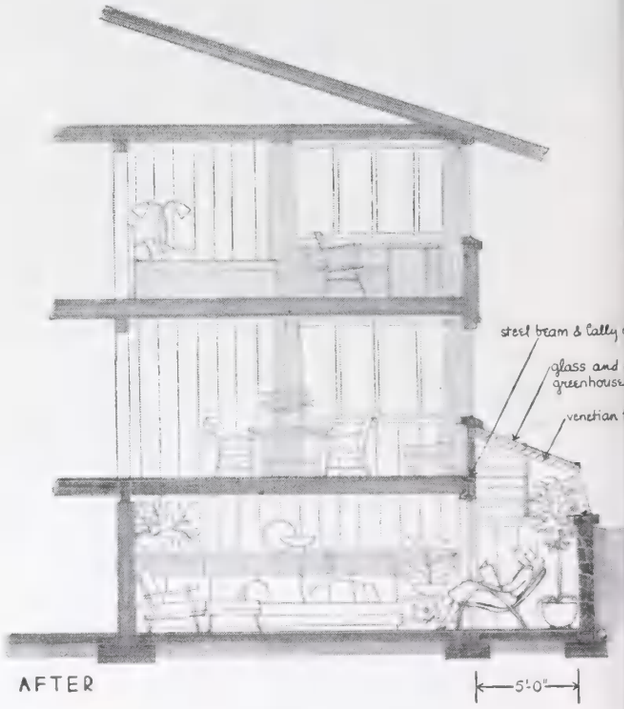
PHOTOGRAPH BY MAYNARD PARKER



Special sun shades keep out summer's heat

This house is one of the first in Arkansas to be heated and cooled by a heat pump (see full story on this new equipment on page 248). Since climate control becomes vital in year-round air conditioning, Architect Jones devised these removable shades to cut down the cooling load in the summer. Light enough to be handled by one man, they are put up in spring and taken down in fall. They shade all the horizontal glass and much of the vertical glass (slope and trees shade the rest). Open construction does not trap hot air.

Here's how an existing basement can use this principle

DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER

Moving out the foundation wall makes a light trap possible

If you have no way to expand your living space but into the basement, here is how you can do it to bring in quantities of natural light. Steel posts, supporting a steel beam, replace the full foundation wall. A retaining wall, nearly the full height of the basement, is built out five feet from the present house wall. Greenhouse glass sections are built up as shown to take in light from the side, from the ends, and from above. Venetian blinds, on tracks, can be used if needed to control the amount of sun entering the room. Though this is a drastic solution to the problem of expansion, it will ensure cheerful, inviting space instead of a compromise never-used basement room.

Looking down the center axis of the house, you see across the pool, beyond the paved entertaining terrace, to a tall fountain falling into a pool in the rear lawn. Thus the theme of water in all its moods—serene in the dining room, refreshing in the swimming pool, playful at the fountain—recurs throughout the house. Below, from fountain, you can see the large, open second-floor terrace.

Now let's get to mixing. Here is a marinade that never fails to win friends.

It will not only marinate your broilables, but can be used for basting, and thus save precious meat juice. This very liquor can serve as a rich sweet and sour sauce:

The Barbecue Marinade

2 tablespoons bacon drippings
1 cup broth
6 tablespoons vinegar
½ teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons soy sauce
1 clove garlic, crushed (to be eventually discarded)
⅓ teaspoon black pepper
½ teaspoon paprika
⅓ cup pineapple juice

Mustard Marinade

Nothing will so cheerfully awaken a bland, sleepy dish as mustard marinade. It is an ancient condiment dating back far beyond Biblical days. Practically every nation has its own brand of mustard. In our country among the imported mustards the French, English, Swedish, German, and Japanese stand out with their own particular characteristics. If you should decide to have your own private brand, remember that the yellow mustard seed is milder and used mostly for marinades, while the brown seed is more pungent and ideal for the mustard paste you get in little jars. If you want to avoid the packaged powdered mustards and you have a tiny mortar and pestle at hand, grind the seed (preferably sun-dried), add by teaspoon a little cold water and equal amounts of milk, mashing constantly, a small quantity of salt and equally little powdered sugar, a little vinegar, olive oil, or other fine vegetable oil. Slowly introduce minute amounts of fine herbs, such as white pepper, tarragon, onion salt, a touch of garlic, but only a touch, marjoram, cinnamon, mace, cloves (in powder form), cardamom, or other condiment piquanteries; add a bit of wine—and at this point start tasting and painting a mustard picture on your palate.

For contrast and a rich pungent savor try a simple marinade often used as a hot or cold sauce:

Lime and Soy Marinade

Juice of 5 limes
½ cup water
2 tablespoons soy sauce
1 slightly bruised garlic (optional)
½ teaspoon onion salt

Marinate scallops, whiting or frogs' legs for at least a couple of hours, and then fry them in butter . . . Lime and soy marinade is also wonderful for lamb destined for the grill or the skewers, like lamb kebab. However, for lamb, add to the marinade an extra cup of vinegar, 1 medium-size onion diced, 1 tablespoon chopped parsley, ½ cup diced carrots and 2 tablespoons olive oil. Let the meat sleep in this brew for the night. Also good for duck, rabbit or lobster.

Sour Cream Marinade for Bell Peppers, Water Cress, and Fresh Tomatoes

For this delicate dish the meaties bell peppers should be used and sliced fine. Combine, say, 2 cups of sliced peppers with a handful of crisp, cooled water cress, 2 cups quartered tomatoes, 2 tablespoons chives, and 2 minced black olives in a marinating bowl. Mix separately: ½ teaspoon nutmeg, ½ cup tarragon wine vinegar, ½ teaspoon salt, ½ lemon (juice), 1 tablespoon brown sugar, and as little water as possible to produce sufficient cover. Store in refrigerator. Just before serving crown it with cold, heavy sour cream.

Mint Marinade

What we describe here is the mint marinade sauce to accompany lamb, spring chicken, sturgeon, or any other delicate light meat or fish. The mint marinade itself is composed of chopped mint leaves (cooked two minutes), light wine vinegar and water (half and half), salt, lemon, lemon rind, and honey. The liquid should be sufficient to cover the meat.

Cauliflowerets in Mint Marinade

Here is a new relish worth playing with. Simply break the nice, fresh cauliflower into flowerets, sprinkle with the marinade, and dust very lightly with ground cinnamon. Steam for three or four minutes. Drain and cool, then place in the mint marinade. Let the flowerets absorb this liquor at least three hours before serving. You will find that they blend beautifully with cold ham, chicken or turkey, especially when accompanied by black currants.

Mint marinade is the most delicate member of the marinade-sauce family. Don't let it associate with very pungent or overwhelming condiments such as chili pepper, much black pepper, garlic, egano, or the more arrogant embers of the onion family. Try vorcing the mint sauce from lamb d give it to a spry spring chicken to that queen—smoked sturgeon.

cup fresh mint leaves chopped fine to 6 tablespoons light wine vinegar cup water lime (juice) teaspoon ginger lemon rind sliced to 2 tablespoons honey teaspoon monsodium glutamate

Boil mint in water two minutes. vered. Add all other ingredients d simmer one minute. Strain. eat in 1 or 2 tablespoons corn- arch, and taste, adding more mon or honey as required. We ways add a few drops of Char- euse to the sauce.

Apple Marinade Soup

cups white wine cups water cup fresh apple purée to 6 peppercorns
teaspoon salt
stick whole cinnamon to 6 cloves
teaspoon allspice
ind of 1 lemon, juice of ½ lemon tablespoons or more brown sugar to 6 egg yolks

Combine and marinate all ingredi- its except egg yolks for one hour, then bring to a boil. Remove from fire. Cool for a few minutes. Beat the egg yolks in a bowl sufficiently large to receive the soup. Slowly strain marinade into bowl beating together with egg yolks. Heat once more and serve like a soup, with rye toast and Bel Paese cheese. (P.S. We like to thicken the apple marinade soup with 1 or 2 tablespoons cornstarch—but this is optional.) Also good to marinate such leftovers as cold chicken, shrimp, scallops, lobster, or lamb.

When you're dying for real Bismarck herring, a Chinese sweet-and-sour pork, or a marinated duckling, why not make it yourself comfortably at home? The marinade itself will take no more time than preparing a stack of hotcakes.

Marinade for Baked or Boiled Cold Fish

Boil for a few minutes:

1 cup water
½ cup tarragon or eschalot red wine vinegar
1 medium onion, sliced in rings
1 clove garlic (to be discarded)
3 bay leaves
1 tablespoon fresh basil or 1 teaspoon dry
1 red pepper
½ teaspoon salt

⅓ teaspoon black pepper
½ lemon
1 teaspoon brown sugar

Pour over previously cooked fish, let cool, and just before serving sprinkle with fine olive oil. . . . Serve with pickled beets, plain boiled potatoes, and hard-boiled eggs. Also good as a sauce for previously cooked wax beans, boiled white turnips, or salmon.

There is hardly a limit to the variety of fish or meat that can be marinated. Naturally one would not select as subjects meat or fish which are lacking in firmness or are not fresh.

Shrimp in Pomegranate Juice

Cook 2 to 3 cups shrimp as usual; drain, remove shell and vein, marinate for at least an hour:

The Marinade

½ cup pomegranate juice (can be bought in Armenian or Syrian grocery stores)
2 to 3 tablespoons tarragon vinegar
2 tablespoons honey
½ cup green olives, minced
1 tablespoon chopped chives
3 to 4 tablespoons tomato purée
½ teaspoon salt
Touch of cayenne
1 tablespoon lemon rind

Before serving add just enough olive oil for flavor and smoothness.

Escabeche and Seviche are two distinct types of marinated fish, both are classified as fine delicatessen by our Latin-American friends. Escabeche is actually of Greek origin, and after a triumphal tour in ancient Rome, it emigrated to Spain and eventually it reached every Latin country in America. Seviche, on the other hand, is entirely a South American concoction. The difference between the two, gastronomically, is considerable. In Escabeche the fish is cooked, but Seviche is raw fish marinated. You can prepare excellent Escabeche from your favorite fish (mackerel, tuna, kingfish, corvina), but the flesh must be solid. The same rule applies to Seviche which in South America is associated with corvina whereas in the U. S. sevichists prefer striped bass, sea trout, shrimp, clams, or a combination of these. The methods of preparation must have suffered a lot of changes during the past centuries, yet the recipes which follow are probably pretty close to the master formulae.

Escabeche

One:

3 pounds of fish, cleaned and cut into bite size pieces, soaked for a half hour in salt solution (1 qt. water, 3 to 4 tablespoons salt). The fish can be pompano, mackerel, corvina, or almost any other firm-fleshed fish of your choice.

Two:

Upon removal from salt, pat fish pieces dry. Pour into heavy skillet ½ cup olive oil and when hot drop in 2 cloves of garlic minced fine, and a few seconds later 3 red peppers and a few bay leaves. Add fish and cook 15 minutes. Set aside.

Three:

Brown lightly 3 medium, sliced onions in 2 tablespoons olive oil, add ½ cup fine vinegar, ½ teaspoon marjoram, ½ teaspoon oregano, ½ teaspoon cumin seed, 3 red peppers, a few drops of tabasco sauce and cook slowly 15—20 minutes. Add 1 or 2 tablespoons water if necessary.

Four:

Cool this sauce. Pour over the fish, mixing thoroughly. Sprinkle with lemon juice and keep it in a cool place until served. Can be made a few hours before or even two or three days before.

Seviche

The true Seviche is simply cubed raw fish in sour orange marinade. No doubt sour orange is a heavenly marinade for the fruit of the sea, but unfortunately, it is not too easy to obtain this particular citrus in the U. S. As a substitute we suggest lime juice. You may even use ordinary lemon juice, if you must, but please don't tell it to your South American friends.

The fish is boned and the meat cut into bite-size cubes. If shellfish is used, shuck the clams, or mussels, and remove shell from raw shrimps. Naturally the dark mass from the clam and the beard from the mussel must be removed first. Next, wash the fish or shellfish in lightly salted water (3 tablespoons salt dissolved in 1 quart of water), then drain. To serve six use:

2 lbs. fish or shellfish
1½ cups sour orange or lime juice
2 medium onions, sliced thin
3 chili peppers (yellow), sliced
2 cloves of garlic, chopped
⅓ teaspoon black pepper
⅓ teaspoon cayenne
Salt to taste
Optional:
1 bell pepper chopped

2 teaspoons chopped chives
2 to 3 tablespoons tomato paste
Brown sugar to taste

Mix all dry ingredients with the garlic and rub the fish with this mixture, then place fish in glass or ceramic bowl. Add onions, peppers, and other greens, and cover with the sour orange juice. If desired add still other condiments, then stir gently to assure a more even distribution of herbs and spices. Let the fish lie in this marinade overnight or the equivalent period before serving. To complete the work garnish your Seviche with black olives soaked in anchovy or olive oil. Seviche will improve with age, but its life in the refrigerator ends within a week.

Marinade for Duckling

Marinate one young plump duckling (4½ to 5 pounds) which has been washed, cut into serving portions, and religiously rubbed with garlic, in a mixture of:

2 cups Burgundy brought to a boil and cooled
1 cup water
1½ teaspoons salt
2 teaspoons sugar
Juice of 1 lemon, sliced
2 to 3 bay leaves
1 carrot, sliced fine
2 medium onions, sliced
1 red pepper
8 to 10 peppercorns
1 teaspoon mustard seed
1 to 2 parsley roots, sliced
2 tablespoons celery tops

Leave the duckling in this marinade for one to three days (the longer the better) under a weight. Upon removing, pat meat dry, roll in flour and brown lightly for a few minutes in half margarine, half bacon fat. Slowly add the strained marinade, reserving only about a half cup of the liquor. Cook duckling in the usual manner. When ready, into the reserved marinade blend 1 tablespoon cornstarch, juice of 1 orange, and 2 tablespoons of any liqueur of your choice. Combine with duckling. Meanwhile the fine-chopped duckling liver is sautéed in butter, with salt, pepper, a little paprika and chopped chives. Add it to duckling. A simple wild rice surrounding the duckling will be a noble accompaniment.

Horseradish Marinade Sauce

Fine for a fat beef brisket or plate beef cooked in soup with celery root, parsley, onion, peppercorns, salt, and saffron. You would serve it with a very piquant horseradish marinade like this:

3 tablespoons garlic vinegar
½ tablespoon lemon juice
1 cup bouillon
4 to 6 tablespoons grated fresh horseradish
2 tablespoons mustard paste, German style
2 tablespoons fresh dill, chopped
½ teaspoon salt
Black pepper and sugar to taste
1 tablespoon olive oil

Oxtail in Chianti Marinade

Marinate two oxtails cut into serving portions in the following concoction:

2 cups Chianti (if it's about to sour so much the better)
3 lemons, juice and sliced rind
2 medium onions, chopped
1 garlic clove
3 bay leaves
12 peppercorns
Sugar to taste
Enough water to cover the meat

Set aside overnight. Remove meat, pat dry, and brown lightly in bacon fat, slowly adding the strained marinade liquor. Add also 1 cup stewed tomatoes, 2 tablespoons chopped green peppers, 2 tablespoons chopped parsley, ⅓ teaspoon white pepper, ½ teaspoon ginger. Cook until almost tender. Transfer to casserole adding this time salt to taste, one cup button mushrooms and ½ tablespoon soy sauce. Bake leisurely for about an hour. Before serving mix a cupful of the juice with sour cream and return to casserole.

All-purpose Marinade for Game or Lamb

The gamy flavor of the meat can be controlled if you use a good marinade. The longer the process, the stronger the gamy flavor and not vice-versa as you would think. Marinating game will make many people who do not now like it, change their minds. Young, tender animals, particularly fowl, require no more than 48 hours marinating, whereas large beasts like deer, bear, moose, etc., are best when saturated thoroughly with the marinade for several days. If they are boned you will reduce the time necessary. Six inches of thickness should take 4 or 5 days, minimum.

You may use the following all-purpose marinade adapting or changing it as you wish. With game use 4 tablespoons vinegar for (Mexico's Federal Route 15, commonly misnamed the "West Coast Highway," reaches the sea at only two points, Guaymas and Mazatlan.) This dazzling diversity of vivid green life, of pure and violent color, of palm forest and wild orchids and great blue bays, remains waiting for the traveler who seeks out the new and the mysterious, seeking change from his own way of life.

Someone once described the west coast of Mexico as more like the South Seas than the South Seas themselves. And so it is.

It is a geography of still lagoons, jungle-walled rivers, waterfalls over palisades into the sea, long white beaches. Its life, basically Indian, is simple and deeply rooted in the nature of the place: palm-thatched houses, dugout canoes; the machete, adze, and hollow gourd as basic implements; a prolific sea where the whale, the porpoise, and the manta ray are still commonplace. Great coquito palms stand 60 feet high behind crescent coves alive with flamboyant colors of fish. There are forests of banyan and palm, ebony and rosewood, adorned with a dozen unfamiliar blooms, parakeets, pelicans, flamingoes, and the rare blue heron. Here at San Blas the ruins of a Spanish fort, and there, close to Acapulco's most elegant hotel, the remains of a great pre-Columbian ceremonial center, now called the Lost City. The traveler finds himself responding to pure sensation and solitude, to the inexpressible naturalness of this life.

Mexico's Pacific coast seems not much farther away than the beaches of Maine and Florida. The best of it lies within an hour or two by air of Mexico City's metropolitan vigor. North and South of the capital, some of the most attractive of the old colonial market towns—Tepic, Guadalajara, Morelia, Oaxaca—have, with the building of new roads, become gateways to this tropical sea. Here and there in the widely scattered coastal towns new hotels (mostly small and nicely adapted to local materials and scene) are opening up new travel ground where few white men have been before.

When to go. There are two seasons: wet and dry. The wet is too much so, and steamy hot. But the months from late October to mid-May are clear delight. The air is bright, there is no rain; the graceful palm branches, the high thatched roofs, the forested headlands stand clear, sharply defined. The trade winds blow in refreshment over a soft warm transparent sea. The nights are invariably cool. In the thousand miles from Mazatlan north to the California border, the climate shades off from semi-tropical to temperate. But the best thousand miles of it, from Mazatlan down to Acapulco, are below the Tropic of Cancer, the true tropics. Christmas and Easter week at the better-known resorts should be avoided; a rush of Mexicans to the sea makes for crowding.

Getting there. So far away from it all, this tropical world is surprisingly close by air. The big smooth turbo-prop Britannias of Aeronaves de Mexico leap from the New York winter to the sun of Mexico City in six hours; then another hour or two of flight and you are in Mazatlan, Puerto Vallarta, or Acapulco. In actual flying time, these remote-seeming Pacific ports are seven hours from New York, seven hours from Chicago by CMA, and a little over four hours from Los Angeles by CMA direct to Mazatlan. Fares, by transatlantic standards, are remarkably low: $104 and $80 from New York and Chicago, respectively, to Mexico City, and $55 from Los Angeles to Mazatlan. You can also fly to Mexico City from New York by Air France, Eastern, and American Airlines; from Miami by Guest Airways; from New Orleans by Eastern.

Along the whole length of this immense coast, about 4,000 miles there are but two full-fledged resort towns, Acapulco and Mazatlan—the first all bounce and glitter, the second still serene with the old-fashioned contentment and gentility of Mexico. Well served by coastal shipping and good roads as well as by frequent and far-ranging air service, they set the limits, north and south, to the most beautiful and interesting stretch of this coast. Halfway between them is Manzanillo, a lusty little Spanish-Indian-Oriental blend straight out of a tale by Conrad, a very old port whose new roads and hotels and boats to hire give access to the nearby rocky bays and sandy beaches of a fabulous shore.

Two other charming coastal towns, each located on a lovely mountain-rimmed bay, with good air service and hotels yet little known, complete the basic itinerary. Puerto Vallarta, like a Mediterranean village terraced on the side of a palm-forested mountain, lies about halfway between Mazatlan and Manzanillo; and Zihuatanejo, whose main street is a banyan-shaded beach on a deep, round jewel of a bay, is a little more than halfway from Manzanillo to Acapulco.

These five small towns are the traveler's base-points, the key centers on which west-coast-of-Mexico itineraries must be based. They are, in themselves, delightful, but they are most usefully seen as gateways to a new world of travel.

Getting in deeper. This area offers four different degrees of travel intensity and depth: (1) to the tourist, who will satisfy himself with the great scenic beauty of Acapulco and Mazatlan, their marvelous fishing, beaches, night life, etc.; (2) to the traveler, who will seek out the simpler, more characterful places whose tropical grandeur remains intact, like Manzanillo, San Blas, Puerto Vallarta, Barra de Navidad, Zihuatanejo, and La Ventosa, which belongs to the gay and refined Zapotec culture way down on the Isthmus of Tehuantepec; (3) to the would-be explorer, who will go beyond these places to the rusticity and utter peacefulness of Tenacatita, Yelapa, and the islands called Las Tres Marias, unknown travel ground where a palm-thatched house on the beach will seem the only fitting habitation; and (4) to the out-and-out adventurer, the man with a map and a sleeping-bag, who will make his base in such primitive little coffee and banana ports as Playa Azul and Puerto Angel, each but 150 miles by new roads through fascinating back country, from two of Mexico's most interesting handcraft-market towns, Uruapan and Oaxaca. From Playa Azul or Puerto Angel he can cruise or fly along hundreds of miles of largely unexplored coast.

These different levels of travel can, of course, be mixed, and in a dozen different ways. From one of the five major base points, the traveler can combine the routes of the major and minor airlines with those of the busses; he can link the pack-horse on the jungle trail with the small coastal steamer; he might even mix the chartered sloop from Acapulco with the chartered plane from Manzanillo. With the help of official travel offices in Mazatlan and Acapulco, of airline agents and travel agents in these and several other towns, and of knowledgeable hotel managers everywhere, t mixtures are simple to concoct a the possibilities almost infinite.

A broad sampling might, for e ample, begin with the de luxe b down over the mountains fr Mexico City to Acapulco (stoppi to see the important craft work primitive Guerrero in the lar market at Iguala). Then, workin up the coast, a seven-hour bus ri on the 150-mile coast road Zihuatanejo; a charter flight Playa Azul and on to Manzanill a coastal trader or chartered bo to Tenacatita and Puerto Vallart a scheduled CMA flight over mou tains, jungles, and immense l goons to Mazatlan; an Aeronav flight over the great blue Gulf California to colonial La Paz o the dramatic and untamed peni sula of Baja California, and s home by way of Los Angeles. trip that is much simpler than seems, and much less expensiv

Much of this coast seems, at firs not very accessible. It has remaine virtually immune to the trav agent, the cruise ship, and even t the automobile. Yet, when yo come close up, exploring it in ste by-step detail, a travel patter emerges. It is a system of sma ports and fishing villages, of di roads and airstrips in the jungle of small coastal freighters, calle cabotaje, sailing close in to pic up cargoes of coconuts and bana nas from dugout-lighters in name less coves, of second-class busse that appear out of nowhere to climb the mountains and ford the jungle streams. It is these unexpected routes and facilities that make i possible, even for the not-so-intrep id traveler, to link isolated re-ort towns and to go to palm-thatch villages and uninhabited coast.

Road links with the interior. Exciting new travel experiences in Mexico are the roads recently pushed through the high Sierras and down to the sea. Some are still being built, but all are usable. Originating in or near seven of the most attractive towns of the central plateau, the new roads provide awesome views of alpine heights and volcanic peaks, as well as glimpses into remote market towns, before taking the sudden plunge into the coastal tropics. By bus or car, the journey takes from six to twelve hours, though the distances are usually no more than 150 to 200 miles.

The mountain range is so high and wild that in the thousand miles between the Texas border and Guadalajara, the bright new metropolis and transportation center of western Mexico, only one rough narrow road has penetrated it. Durango to Mazatlan. Tepic to San Blas and Puerto Vallarta. Guadalajara to Manzanillo and Barra de Navidad. Uruapan to Playa Azul. Mexico City to Acapulco. Oaxaca to Puerto Angel and La Ventosa—these, from north to south, are the varied new slices of inside Mexico that bring the Pacific coast within reach of motorist and bus traveler.

Bus service varying from country-style to luxury, runs on all these roads. Self-drive rented cars are available in Mexico City and Acapulco and chauffeured cars in most of the main-road towns. Except for Manzanillo and Acapulco, there is very little use for any but high-clearance vehicles along the coast itself.

For the devotee of railroads there is an unforgettable day-long journey in turn-of-the-century plush style from Guadalajara to Manzanillo: vendors, burros, Indians, plantation owners, cowboys, lost mountain towns—a rich cross-section of rural Mexico.

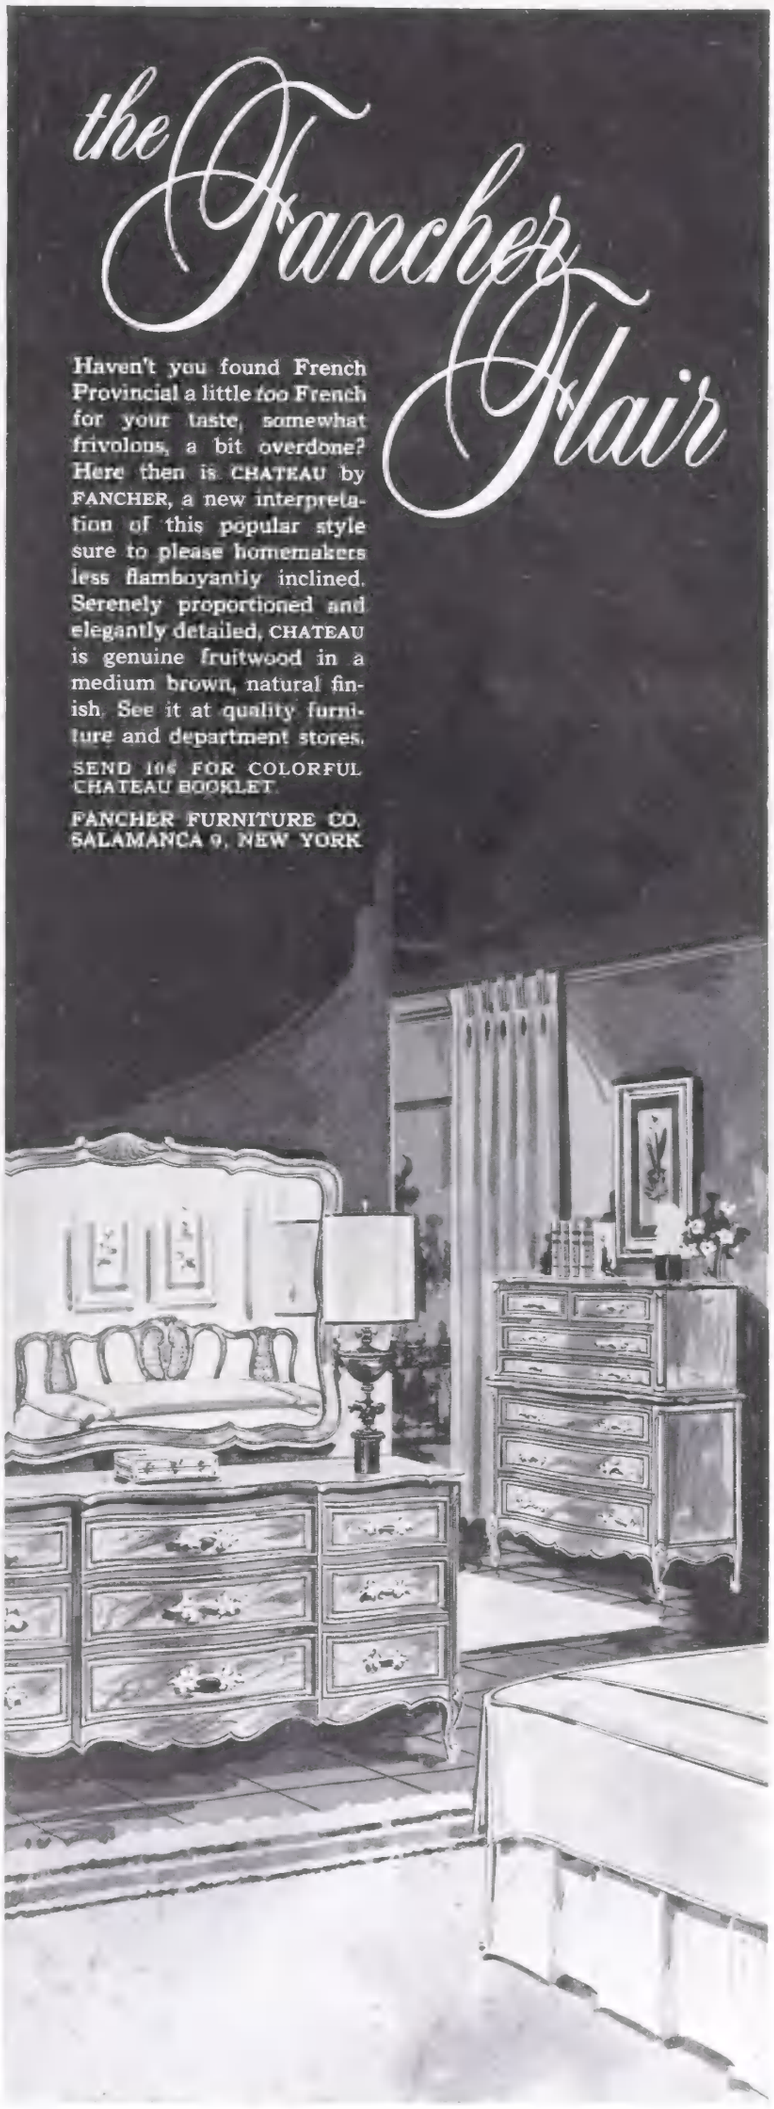
Even the traveler whose main interest is in the colonial towns of the high plateau must allow time to experience one of these roads. The most memorable of all cross-mountain drives in North America.

Discovery by air. The roads, however, have their limitations. They are, mostly, slow and not linked to one another along the coast, so that the motorist must do a lot of backtracking. The answer is air travel. It is the commercial airlines (and only in the last few years) that have rediscovered for us the almost forgotten paradises that the Indian kings (and later the Spaniards) found and lost.

Mexico's two major airlines, CMA and Aeronaves de Mexico (both affiliated with Pan American) cover a lot of ground in the west of Mexico comfortably and efficiently, both from the towns of the central plateau and from the Arizona and California borders and Los Angeles. Aeronaves has a one-hour shuttle service from Mexico City to Acapulco, and CMA goes from Guadalajara to Puerto Vallarta in an hour and on to Mazatlan in another 30 minutes.

Regularly scheduled small-plane services penetrate even deeper into the little known areas of the coast and afford one of the rarest of travel pleasures—the low altitude scenic air view. Most of these smaller lines, practically unknown to the ordinary traveler, take you well beyond the tourist world. If, for example, you find Acapulco overdeveloped, the precise services of Aerolineas Mexicanas will take you quickly up the coast to Zihuatanejo where one good hotel, the Catalina, on a terraced, palm-shaded hillside, with its open-sided dining room overlooking beach, bay, and outrigger dugout canoas below, has the field more or less to itself. The circle trip — Mexico City to Acapulco to Zihuatanejo to Mexico City—takes three hours' flying time, costs about $25. The Catalina's rates—$14.40 a day for two, with meals—strike an average for the whole coast, double the prices of Puerto Vallarta, and half those of Acapulco.

The traveler in search of the completely unbeaten track will exult in the offerings of two reliable back-country airlines operating from Oaxaca. LAGOSA—its interiors like those of the second-class busses: chickens, Indians, traveling musicians, etc.—goes up from Oaxaca's 5,000-foot-high plateau and over the wild green Sierra to Tututepec, and then, with six stops at market towns in the coffee-growing country, flies over this unexploited Oaxaca coast to Acapulco, all for about $11.



Another LAGOSA flight goes 3 times a week to the good quiet beaches of isolated Puerto Angel. Fly down and take the slow bus back for the views and the markets of remote Indian towns like Ejutla.

Also from Oaxaca the Cessna Aircraft of Aerovias Rojas provide what is very likely the most exciting day's sightseeing in Mexico: a three-hour round trip over the mountains to the sea and the "South Seas" coffee port of Puerto Escondido. With four 15-minute stopovers, the cost is about $10.

Surprises abound along these off-track air routes. A LAGOSA stop, for instance, on the Oaxaca-Acapulco run is Ometepec, one of a string of Spanish towns at the foot of the Sierra a few miles from the sea, still with a certain ghostly grandeur, where fabulous gold mines once flourished. Less than an hour's flight from the bright lights of Acapulco, Ometepec's decaying mansions on broad streets (with a large Indian population) lie quite beyond the tourist pale.

Another air "discovery" is Playa Azul, reached from the old mountain handcraft center of Uruapan by Lineas Aereas Picho. Lying about 100 miles above Zihuatanejo on a striking coast of sea cliffs and mountain ridges, this is a village of palm-thatch and a couple of very simple inns. Today almost no one outside the state of Michoacan knows it is there, but one day its fine beaches will probably be the basis of a thriving resort.

An especially rewarding route is flown by Trans Mar de Cortes from Tijuana on the California border down the rugged lonely coasts of Baja California; and another by Mayo Obregon from the old fishing resort of Guaymas (about 400 miles north of Mazatlan) across the Gulf of California, then down to La Paz.

At most of these airports charter service is available, at about $25 a day for a four-passenger and proportionately less by the week. The pilot-owners are a race of superior fliers who know this coast well.

Living the tropical life. Where, in all this great length of coast, to begin? One might, of course, just pick a road, any road down from the plateau, and plunge in. But if you want to be methodical, to begin with something a bit more familiar and then by easy stages move toward the unknown, try Acapulco.

This very old port, only recently arrived at the status of a major resort, is, under and around its delirious growth of hotels, in a natural setting that puts Cannes, Nice, and Biarritz to shame. True, there may be too much of it, and it may have a touch of Nice, a trace of Miami, and a hint of Brighton.

However, it is essentially a real Mexican extravaganza, an extraordinary potpourri of Indian market and glass-bottomed boats, of bull fights and open-air night clubs, of luxurious villas in great gardens, and fishermen's huts on the beach. Golf, tennis, water-skiing, skin-diving schools, wonderful deep-sea fishing—all this on a fabulous sheltered bay that seems a million miles from anywhere. Acapulco is, in fact, the only town of any size on the coast of Guerrero, which is one of the most primitive states in Mexico.

Its hotels range from simple pensions to a skyscraper on the beach, El Presidente. Other hotels that make the most of the tropical environment are the luxurious Pierre Marques, on a 187-acre estate 14 miles out of town; and Las Brisas, 800 feet above the water, its imaginative bungalows terraced on a flowering mountainside.

One of Acapulco's advantages is that it offers the West Coast's greatest quantity and variety of facilities for moving on to greener fields—boats, planes, cars, horses, guides, etc. It offers dugout launches, cat boats, cabin cruisers, auxiliary sloops (from $2 an hour to $50 a day) for exploring the coast, near and far, and there's a brisk business in boat-and-crew-hire for fishermen who are out after sailfish.

Manzanillo and Mazatlan also have good stocks of boats to charter, or, if you are patient and hardy, you can get passage on a coastal freighter from any of the three ports. Knowing yachtsmen consider this coast one of the world's most desirable cruising grounds. And if you would see and live this Pacific shore intensively, the way is by water.

Along the way the full bloom and majesty of beach, forest, headland, and mountain will show itself; and the Indian village on the pristine cove, living its life as it did 400 years ago and more. He who wants action can angle for giant billfish, or two dozen other varieties; there are no better fishing waters anywhere. Or go ashore to hunt: deer, wildcat, iguana, crocodile, cougar, mountain lion, jaguar. Or sit peacefully in a jungle clearing (so dif-erent from the claustrophobic enes of tropic legend) to watch ne vivid birds come and go; or to llect orchids.

Then a picnic: the fresh-caught sh spitted over a fire on the beach, ne big oysters and lobsters brought p off the rocks by a boy from the illage. Bananas right off the tree, angoes, pineapples, papaya, a unk of sugar cane. Good Mexian beer, or a coconut, its milk oiked with gin.

The climax, perhaps, for the aveler seeking to refresh his view f life and how to live it, is some nall perfect bay like that of Tarindo, with its single house, a asic dwelling that is in and of ne nature of the setting, high-itched oriental-looking thatched of, four walls, and a doorway. A ouse of two rooms, with hard-acked sand for a floor, so green nd fresh in its walls of woven alm leaf and roof of palm-thatch at it is like living in the palm ee itself. (When they are new—ne palm just cut—they are like vo-celled chambers of cool green ght; an unforgettable sensation.) ou experience a sharp sense of ifference, of a totally other style f living. Or as Gauguin said: "I m far far away from the prisons at European houses are. . . . A Iaori hut does not separate man om life, from space, from the in-nite. . . ."

With nerves released from the ension of our northern life, you ay want to let everything go and tay for a week in such a house on uch a beach. The opportunity can e found, ready-made, at remote enacatita, reached from Manzanlo by jungle road or from Guadajara by charter plane. Here a ealthy local planter has built a umber of these native houses, lightly adapted for comfort's sake, which modern beds stand on the and of the wide idyllic beach, at ne head of a rockbound uninhabited bay, about $10 a day for two persons.

Or if you prefer to create your own Eden, the local men will build you a simple version of one of these houses for about $50, where you can sling your hammock and go native, more or less. To watch them build and thatch the house, after they have brought great wagon-loads of palm leaf in from the jungle, just as they have been building them for the past thousand years, is alone worth the price.

The more substantial houses to rent are scarce in most places, but they can be found, at rents varying from $50 to $150 a month, at Puerto Vallarta, Acapulco, Guaymas, Mazatlan.

Then, at Manzanillo perhaps (where the best hotel, the Colonial, a thing of arcades, fountains, and balconies over a tiled patio, costs about $5 a day, with meals) you might find another boat and go on until you came to a fishing village like Barra de Navidad, where the men squat Indian-style to talk in the sand street of the "plaza," where the bareback horse race and the cockfight on a Sunday afternoon are the week's highlights. And where, at times of fiesta, you will hear the rattles and drums and the flute-like piping of the Chirimía that accompany the rhythmic stomping of the ritual dances before a crude shrine on the beach.

This is still, essentially, a pagan world, where the Coras, the Huichols, the Tarascans come down to the sea as they have always done to observe the old rituals. And in this setting one remembers the majesty of the Aztec and Tarascan kings who came down from the plateau to delight in the sea at Acapulco and Zihuatanejo; and the richness and refinements of temples and palaces built by still earlier peoples to match the magnificence of this incomparable coast.

This inner-court house used to be two separate buildings

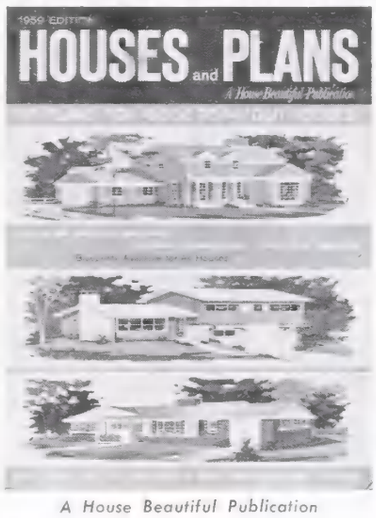
Imaginative planning turned an old Spanish-style bungalow and its detached garage into a contemporary house

▪ Adapting an old house to today's living sometimes calls for a bold stroke—something beyond knocking out a wall or adding on a room. In the case of this Santa Barbara, California, remodeling, it meant picking up a three-room house and moving it to a new location on the same lot. By pushing it back from the street and adding a wing to connect it to a rebuilt garage-studio at the rear of the plot, a single U-shaped house was created. The inner court that resulted gives the owners a protected and private place to enjoy the good year-round climate. An easy-to-park-in carport replaced the long narrow driveway and provided shelter for people debarking from the entrance to the house. The two original buildings were both California-Spanish in design, and the architect, Lutah Maria Riggs, carefully designed all the new structural work in the same style. Home of Mr. and Mrs. J. James Hollister.

A sheltered patio, protected on three sides, is now the core of the U-shaped house, providing a pleasant view for every room. A new wing (center) joins the former studio (right) to the original house. Forming this court gave the owners real privacy on a narrow lot. On cool or cloudy days this is a good spot to enjoy the outdoors because it is shielded from the wind. Plants soften the lines of the building, require little care.

BEFORE

Before remodeling (above) buildings were separated. Cars had to be stacked in narrow drive and people could get drenched walking to the front door. Street was too narrow to allow parking in front of house, near the entrance.



New parking area (below) brought advantages of old-fashioned porte-cochere. You drive right up to the front door, enter without being exposed to weather. Cover was created by extending roof of house after it was moved back from street. Parking convenience is part of planning.

INNER-COURT HOUSE WAS TWO BUILDINGS

The plan of the original buildings shows the house set right on the street. It was moved 17½ feet back and 5 feet to the left. The garage was replaced by a new master bedroom, connecting with the existing bath. This formed a three-sided, intimate patio.

Mezzanine at the entrance end of the living room was reached by a ladder, making it difficult for anyone but children to use. Odd-size cupboards and open shelf took up valuable space that could be used for hats and coats, or mops and other cleaning things.

AFTER

Stairs were built to make the mezzanine easy to reach. A low solid wall replaces the open railing, giving the area enough privacy to be a spare bedroom. The storage wall that stands in place of the cupboards can hold a great deal. The kitchen is seen at the right of the stairs.

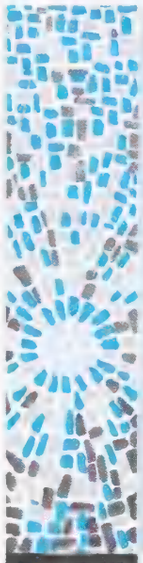
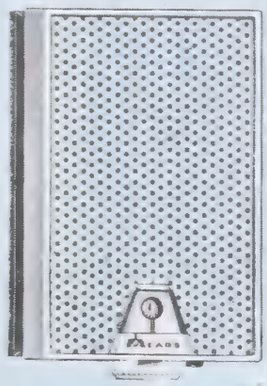
AFTER

Moving house back from the street left room for four cars to park at the front door. Kitchen was expanded to the right, but space was left for a service corridor to back door. Guest wing has its own walkway and entrance.



THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER



Wide kitchen became more efficient when a cooking island was built in the center to save steps. The table at the left has a built-in corner seat for meals. Outdoor meals are easy to serve because a door out of view at the left opens onto the patio. Wall cabinet doors are made of windows removed in remodeling.

Guest room was made out of the former studio next to the garage. It is completely separate from the rest of the house with its own bathroom and entrance. Sliding door to bathroom uses less space than a hinged one would.

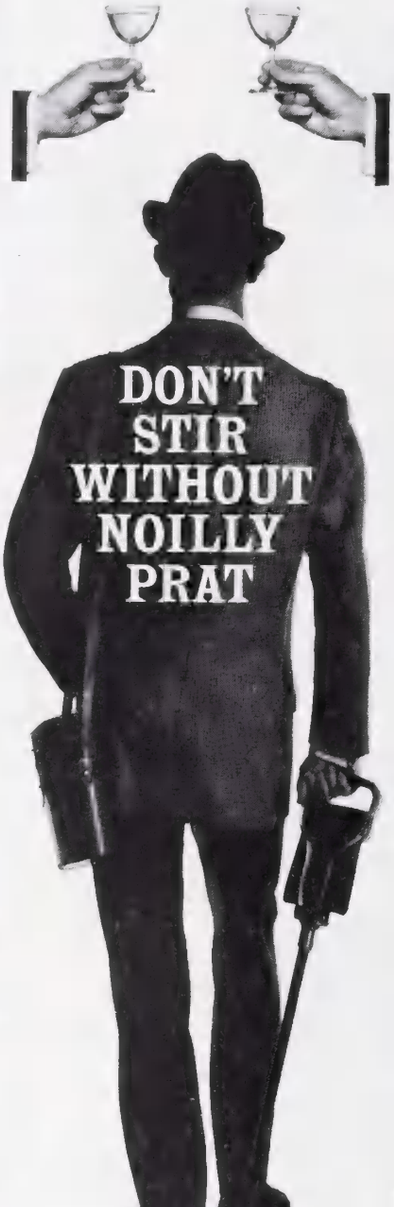
grow," standing with salt, pepper, and sugar as a table seasoning.



Our nine candidates for your seasoning shelf in the kitchen are: soy sauce (as a cooking ingredient), fresh ginger, sesame seed oil, dried oriental mushrooms, oyster sauce, "Five Precious Spices" (five-spice powder), Hoisin sauce, fermented bean cake, and bean curd. Here are our reasons for recommending these nine, and recipes for each seasoning.

Soy sauce is the most indispensable of our family of nine. Once you've gotten the hang of cooking with soy, you'll wonder how you ever got along without it. There is no seasoning in our American cuisine that is as all-purpose, unless it is salt.

We consider the imported Chinese and Japanese soy sauces, made by a process of natural fermentation and aged over a period of months, like wine, superior in flavor to the chemically-produced, quickly-made soy sauces made in America. True, the imported are more expensive because they are still made "by hand," so to speak, instead of by methods of chemical hydrolysis. But the good Oriental brands have, we think, more natural flavor, are milder, less salty, and more subtle-tasting. And there are several types with these excellent qualities, so you can be selective. After you have cooked with soy for a while, you develop preferences for one type or another.

This country imports a number of types and brands, with different flavors and density of brew. The Number One Boy among the Chinese types is Sang Chau, light in density and color, a sauce with a pure, clean taste of soy bean essence. (Soy is made from boiled, ground soy-beans blended with ground roasted wheat, salt, water, and a culture of rice ferment.) If you don't ask for Sang Chau by name, you will get what is loosely known as "soy sauce," darker, thicker, more pungent in flavor. It is used for both the table and for what the Chinese call their "red cooking"—cooking incarnadined by this dark-colored soy sauce.

Another high-class soy sauce widely distributed in the U.S. is Japanese "Kikko Man." In strength, its natural, full-bodied flavor, density and degree of saltiness, it ranks in between the thin, light Canton Chinese Sang Chau Soy and the dark Chinese soy sauce.

EXTRA DRY! Remember—a Dry Martini is not a hooker of gin or vodka. Use enough of the new Extra Dry Noilly Prat French Vermouth to make its civilizing presence felt. It will make a vital difference in your Dry Martini!

BROWNE VINTNERS CO., INC., N. Y. SOLE U. S. DISTRIBUTOR

In the recipes which explain a give uses for our nine Chinese gredients, you'll find the whys a wherefores of all three of these s sauce varieties.

But don't stop with the recip we give. Sprinkle soy sauce on yo steaks and roasts. Stir it into t richly clotted drippings they lea in skillet or roasting pan, and s how much more piquancy it giv to gravies.

Add soy sauce to salad dressing to the stuffing for your Thanksgi ing turkey, Rock Cornish hen roast chicken. Use it to enri your barbecue sauce, fish and she fish dishes, the squabs, eggs, a soup you cook. Flavor your me by soaking before cooking in t marinade we give. Any one of t three Oriental soy sauces we sho can be used, depending upon t degree of flavor you want.

Here is our marinade for slice pork, beef, lamb, or poultry in quantity that will well cover abo two pounds of meat.

Meat Marinade

⅓ cup soy sauce
¼ cup honey
2 large or 4 small cloves of garli and/or several slices of fresh gi ger, run through garlic press

Place honey in pitcher and cove with boiling water to make one cup Stir well until honey is dissolved It's there for flavoring, but it als glazes meat and seals in juices Add soy sauce and garlic or ginge juice. Mix all ingredients, and pou over meat in an enamel pan. Tur meat occasionally, and keep covere with wax paper and foil wrap. I you want to be authentically Chi nese, blend in 1½ tablespoons o cornstarch. Like honey, cornstarch seals in juices and prevents shrink age of meat.

Let meat slices lie in this mari nade for a few minutes or even overnight. Beef, pork, and poultry soak it up in 5 to 15 minutes. Lamb needs to marinate for 6 to 12 hours.

Fresh Ginger Root is to Oriental food what garlic is to the Italian and the Spanish. And you should think of it as interchangeable with garlic or onion in any recipe—Chinese or not. Ginger looks like a malformed potato, is mildly spicy. It's fiberless when young, peppery in taste; tough in fiber the older it gets. Both the Chinese and Japanese peel and slice fresh ginger paper-thin. After that, they either mince it and blend with other ingredients or they crush it with the flat side of a cleaver to break fibers and loosen juices, then cook it whole, removing the whole piece at the end of the cooking period.

They hold great store by fresh ginger for de-fishing fish and duck (some, as you know, are even fishier than fish). The Chinese are the alchemists who discovered that ginger will deodorize garlic when cooked with it in the same pot. This makes the pungent little clove less anti-social, but doesn't rob it of its flavor. Fresh ginger root is a hardy tuber that can be ordered by mail and, like the potato, keeps well in a cool, dark place. It can be kept for months in a flower pot in sand which is occasionally dampened. And if the tuber sprouts, even the off-shoots can be used. So if ordering by mail, it pays to purchase a pound or two.

The recipe below dramatizes the job a slice of ginger, no bigger than a dime, can do in spicing up a dish, in de-fishing a fish.

Sweet and Sour Sauced Fish
(Serves 4)

1 two-pound whole, clean fresh sea bass or porgy (or any frozen fish you prefer, thawed and drained)
2 teaspoons soy sauce (Chinese thick)
2 tablespoons cornstarch or flour
2 cups condensed chicken broth (canned) "College Inn" or Swanson's
4 tablespoons vinegar
5 tablespoons brown sugar
1 slice ginger, crushed and minced
1 clove garlic, crushed
2 tablespoons peanut oil

The proportions between vinegar and sugar may be adjusted to taste, but don't skimp too much on sugar.

Blend all ingredients together except oil and chicken broth, and cook in a sauce pan until mixture thickens slightly. Set sauce aside. Using a big skillet, heat peanut oil over high flame, toss in crushed garlic clove, sizzle until it has nothing left to give, and discard. Score raw fish with two-inch gashes—about two inches apart. Pour 2 tablespoons soy sauce over the raw fish. Then fry fish on both sides until it looks grilled and golden; add chicken broth, cover and cook until tender. Before dishing up, stir in sauce, heat and serve. Small pieces of fish can likewise be treated this way.

Sesame Oil: The Chinese use only as a seasoning this fragrant, aromatic oil that tastes like a cross between almond and peanut oil. They use it sparingly. But even in miniscule amounts, it imparts a strong and pervasive flavor. A few drops, sprinkled into a cup of soup releases flavor, as a perfume diffuses fragrance. You can rescue the dullest salad by adding a couple of teaspoons of sesame oil to its oil dressing. Or use equal parts of sesame oil and soy sauce to make a wonderful salad dressing for lettuce, watercress, or bean sprouts. Like peanut oil, sesame oil is high in unsaturated fatty acids. So any use of it for flavoring or cooking helps, if you are interested in a low-cholesterol diet. But apart from health reasons, sesame oil is very pleasing to the palate.

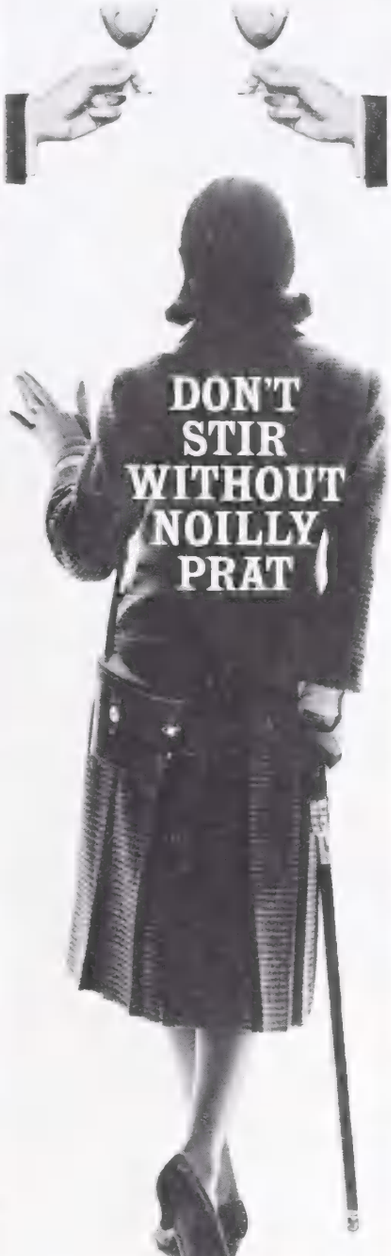
Cold Cucumber Salad With Sesame Oil Dressing
(Serves 4)

4 small cucumbers
1 teaspoon salt
2 tablespoons Sang Chau Soy
2 teaspoons sugar
1 tablespoon sesame oil
½ cup red wine vinegar
½ cup chopped parsley
2 scallion tops, finely sliced

Peel cucumbers and cut into round, thin slices. If cucumbers are large, cut in half lengthwise, then slice in rounds.

Make a dressing of soy sauce, sugar, and sesame oil. Add vinegar and salt, blend with the salad dressing and pour over cucumber slices. Garnish salad with scallions and parsley, and serve on lettuce.

Mung Bean Salad With Sesame Oil Croutons
(Serves 4)



2 pounds fresh bean sprouts (or 2 cans)
1 scant teaspoon mustard
2 teaspoons sugar
¼ teaspoon white pepper
¼ cup white vinegar
2 tablespoons Sang Chau Soy
2 tablespoons salad oil
2 tablespoons sesame oil
Croutons:
3 slices French bread
1 tablespoon butter
1 tablespoon sesame seeds
White of one egg

Wash fresh bean sprouts (see HOUSE BEAUTIFUL, May 1959 for methods of growing your own), or use the canned variety, and drain off water. If fresh, blanch sprouts. But turn off flame the minute the water comes to a boil. Remove sprouts to colander and run cold water through. Drain and chill.

Make salad dressing of oil, vinegar, and seasonings and blend in a jar or bottle. Shake well, and put away to stand before using.

Sesame Seed Croutons: To make these, cut bread into cubes, dip each one lightly in egg white, and fry in tablespoon of butter in which sesame seeds are mixed. When croutons are golden, remove. Use to scatter over your salad bowl of bean sprouts, after you've poured in your salad dressing.

LITTLE PEAS with Verve

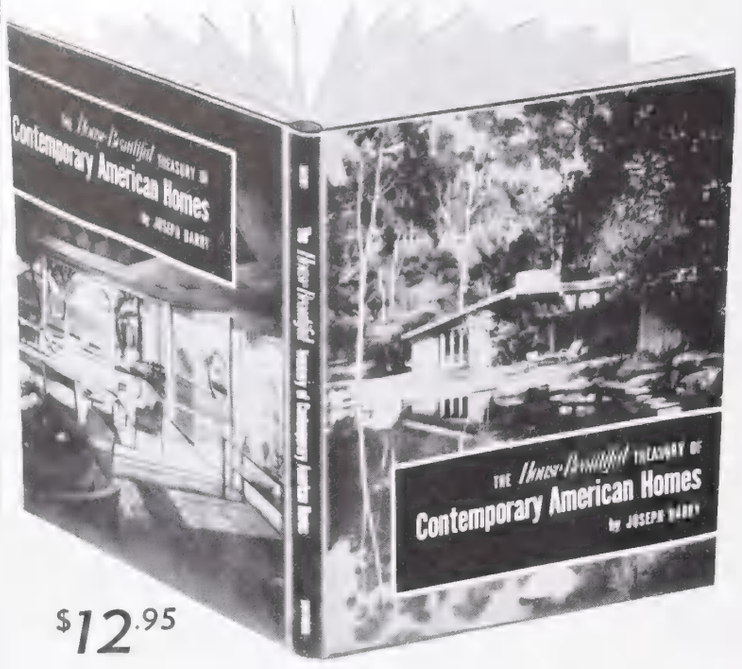
According to medieval legend, the thunder-god Thor gave peas to men. And men respectfully ate peas only on his day, Thursday.

Today, however, the rare taste of two exceptional kinds of peas has caused the bolder sort of men to eat peas more often. One of these kinds, as you well know, is the celebrated petits pois of France. The other is its only rival, a special kind of peas being grown on certain acres in this country.

These little American peas are very sprightly to the taste. They're little peas with verve. Very young and tender. Their flavor quite unlike that of any other peas you may have tasted.



This most unusual flavor begins with the genealogy of these little peas. They are grown from seed developed through hundreds of recorded breedings and crossbreedings. This seed is planted in soils specially reserved for its nurture, in a climate peas like best.

The stripling plants are carefully tended during their brief life. And when the little peas have achieved their peak flavor, they are picked and packed promptly to retain all their succulence.

These verve-y little peas are called Le Sueur Brand peas. Finer grocers do their best to keep them in supply. May we suggest that you order several tins and enjoy them tonight? Or Thursday?

Dried Mushrooms: Whether brownish, black-capped, or radial-striped, little or big, thin or thick, the mushrooms from Japan will add more honest-to-goodness flavor and texture to a soup, meat, or vegetable dish than any other seasoning you can use. These mushrooms have a rich, woodsy flavor like fresh truffles, have a meat taste as concentrated as boeuf en gelée, or bites next to the beef bone. Seeming to echo or respond to a counterpart in your own body, here are mushrooms that make you say "Ah" as a good, strong beer does on a hot day, as a vintage burgundy does when the weather is cool.

Peking House Steak Kew
(Courtesy, New York's Peking House Restaurant. Serves 4)

In this dish fat mushrooms as black as weathered oak logs on which they grew compete with generous pink-centered, juicy chunks of beef fillet like performing twins, vying for the honors of an act.

1½ pounds fillet of beef
3 tablespoons soy sauce, thick
8 or 10 dried Japanese mushrooms (whole)
½ cup green pepper, diced
1 cup sliced bamboo shoots (canned)
1 cup sliced water chestnuts, (fresh if available; if not, canned by S. S. Pierce)
2 medium size onions, minced
4 or 5 slices of ginger, crushed and minced
1 clove garlic, crushed and minced
½ box frozen petits pois (Sea Brook Farm or Snow Crop)
1 teaspoon cornstarch in 2 tablespoons water
3 tablespoons peanut oil
Dash of salt and pepper

Soak mushrooms until they expand and are soft (about 15 minutes), drain, squeeze out water, cut off any remaining stem, and set aside. Make cornstarch paste.

Cut beef in chunky pieces about 2½″ x 2″ x 1″, and moisten with soy sauce. Let stand for about 10 minutes, turning in sauce once.

Heat one tablespoon peanut oil in wok or large skillet over high flame, and stir-fry beef quickly. Remove while steak is still rare and juicy inside, and set aside.

Using remainder of oil, stir-fry mushrooms and green pepper, giving them a good start over other ingredients. Add bamboo shoots, water chestnuts, minced onions, ginger, garlic, peas, salt, and pepper, and stir-fry for about two minutes, or until peas are tender. Return meat to the skillet, and give it a couple of quick turns. Make a well in center of skillet, stir in cornstarch paste, and cook only until sauce thickens. Serve hot.

Cabbage with Mushrooms
(Serves 4)

1 cabbage (between 2 and 3 lbs., Chinese cabbage preferred)
¾ cup sliced bamboo shoots (canned)
8 or 9 medium-size dry mushrooms
1 teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon monosodium glutamate
2 tablespoons peanut oil

Wash cabbage, remove bruised outer leaves, slice all but the stalky part. Soak mushrooms until soft (about 15 minutes), dig out remnants of stems and cut mushrooms into halves. Save the water in which they've soaked for use as a liquid in this dish. Slice bamboo shoots.

Heat oil and stir-fry mushrooms for a couple of minutes. Add cabbage and stir-fry a few times. Add bamboo slices and salt, and stir a few times more. Add 4 tablespoons of mushroom water (more if cabbage tends to cook dry), cover, and cook for about eight more minutes. When ready, cabbage should be a transparent, tender green and crisp without any hint of rawness.

Oyster Sauce is a condiment with a gusty flavor like one of our steak sauces. Also bedded down in the thick, brown liquid of oyster sauce is a rich fine bouquet quite unlike anything in American or European cuisines. Although derived from cooked oysters, there's nothing fishy about its taste. Certain regional Chinese cuisines use it as a dip for boiled chicken and roast pork at the table. Other regional cuisines use it only for cooking fish, poultry, and meat.

Flank Steak in Oyster Sauce
(Serves 4)

1½ pounds flank steak, thinly sliced
4 tablespoons oyster sauce
3 tablespoons peanut oil
2 tablespoons sherry
1½ teaspoons cornstarch
1 clove garlic, minced
2 stalks scallions, minced
1 slice ginger, minced
White of egg, not beaten

For easy slicing of steak into ⅛-inch slices, put meat in the freezer compartment of your refrigerator long enough to stiffen. Slice, and marinate for about one hour before cooking in the following mixture: sherry, sugar, and cornstarch. Turn slices over at least once while they marinate.

Mix oyster sauce with minced garlic, scallions, and ginger, and set aside.

Heat oil in Chinese wok or large skillet over high flame, and stir-fry meat quickly. Reduce flame, add oyster sauce mixture, and stir a couple of minutes, add egg white, and stir a minute more. Serve with rice.

Five-spice Powder: This famous spice blend of ground cloves, Chinese star anise, cinnamon, fennel, and licorice root is called Heung New Fun by the Chinese. It is rich, aromatic, and lightly sweet, as cloves are sweet. The Chinese consider these five spices to be a masterpiece of blending, and any dish for which they are used—roast duck, roast chicken, squab or barbecued spareribs—becomes a Festival Dish. Because flavor is potent, a half teaspoonful is all you'll need in recipe that follows for our appetizer of barbecued spareribs.

Barbecued Spareribs
(Serves 4)

1¾ pound spareribs
2 tablespoons soy sauce, thick
3 tablespoons hoisin sauce
2 garlic cloves, crushed
1 slice ginger, crushed
2 tablespoons honey or brown sugar
½ teaspoon five-spice blend
¼ cup hot water

Cut pork spareribs between bones, but don't sever the link. Mince crushed garlic and ginger. Mix these with soy sauce, hoisin sauce, honey or brown sugar, the five-spice blend, and hot water. Use to coat spareribs on both sides and between bones, and let marinate for from one-half to one hour. Cook in shallow pan on oven rack at 375° F. Set a pan of water beneath to keep meat moist. After cooking 10 or 15 minutes, turn spareribs over, reduce oven temperature to 250° F., and cook until deliciously brown and well done. Cut spareribs apart into appetizer portions, and serve hot with a dip of English mustard or Chinese plum sauce.

Hoisin Sauce (pronounced hoy-sin): You'll probably remember having eaten this sweet and spicy red sauce with the Peking roast duck you had in a Chinese restaurant. Although hoisin sauce looks like plum preserves, and tastes like some delicious fruit you can't quite call by name, it is composed of aromatic beans, sugar, garlic, salt, and the best kind contains chili. Sold in cans, it is used by the Chinese as a table condiment for dipping roasted duck, shellfish, pork spareribs, and other meats. But they also use it for cooking. Used in a patty of ground beef, you'll see its brilliance.

Hamburgers, Chinese Style
(Serves 4)

1 pound freshly-ground beef (or pork)
1 clove garlic, crushed
½ cup diced green pepper
1 cup scallions, diced fine
1 tablespoon soy sauce (Chinese thick)
1 tablespoon hoisin sauce
½ teaspoon monosodium glutamate
Dash of pepper, pinch of salt
1 tablespoon cornstarch
1 teaspoon Five-spice Powder
1 tablespoon peanut oil

Heat oil in skillet and toss in garlic to sizzle itself out, discard.

Mix ground meat, diced scallions, other seasonings, and cornstarch (it binds ingredients together, holds in juices and keeps meat from shriveling), make patties, and pan-fry.

Roast Pork Chops, Hoisin Sauce
(Serves 8)

To hoisin sauce, this dish owes much of its heady richness, a richness without fat for which the Chinese cuisine is famous.

This method of roasting pork produces memorable results. Loin chops or fresh butt of pork may be used. The meat may be used as a main-course meat for 8 servings, as given. Or increase the quantity, using as many pounds as you want to store, and keep in the refrigerator for shredding, for flavoring stir-fry vegetables, for enriching soups. The roast pork can also be cut into bite-sizes and served on toothpicks as cocktail hors d'oeuvres. If quantity of meat is increased, change the quantity of ingredients for seasoning.

To roast, you'll need to use metal shower curtain hooks (they can be bought by the dozen for less than 50 cents) for suspending chop (or strip of pork) from oven rack.

8 medium-size pork chops (with all visible fat removed) or use comparable weight in pork loin, cut in strips as thick as pork chops
2 slices green ginger, crushed and minced
2 scallions, chopped fine
1 clove garlic, crushed and minced
2 tablespoons chili sauce
2 tablespoons hoisin sauce
3 tablespoons sherry
3 tablespoons soy sauce (thick Chinese soy)
1½ teaspoons brown sugar or honey
½ teaspoon salt
Dash of pepper

Make a marinade of all seasonings, and coat chops on both sides. Pierce meat to allow marinade to penetrate, and let stand for about two hours, turning chops over two

Fermented Bean Cake is to the Chinese cuisine what Camembert cheese is to the French. In fact, this Chinese "cheese," which is bean curd fermented in alcohol or strong wine, tastes very much like France's celebrated cheese. Its Oriental counterpart is bottled in this country by the Chinese, and a little of it goes a long way in rescuing from tastelessness many plain cooked vegetables, among these squash, spinach, lettuce:

String Beans with Fermented Bean Cake
(Serves 4)

1 package frozen string beans (frenched)
1 teaspoon fermented bean cake sauce
2 tablespoons peanut oil
½ teaspoon salt in ¾ tablespoon cold water

Heat oil over high flame and stir-fry beans. Add liquid, cover, and cook slowly for about 6 minutes. Add fermented bean cake sauce, mix well, and cook for another minute. Serve hot.

Bean Curd (or "tofu") is made from soybean milk and is rich in proteins, fats, and minerals. In an old Chinese proverb, it is called "the meat without bones." Like baked custard or cream cheese in consistency, it is white in color and has a bland taste, something like yogurt. This very mildness, which makes bean curd receptive to more aggressive flavors of other ingredients, is one of its admirable qualities. Whether fresh or canned, the bean curd cake, in small handy-to-use squares, may be boiled, stir-fried, or oven-cooked.

Westerners who have adopted it love bean curd cubes in omelets. Also Western is this method:

Split a cake of bean curd in half and top each piece with a cut strip of crisp, fried bacon. Sprinkle bacon-topped bean curd with soy sauce, dash of paprika, and crisp in the oven. Serve on toast.

For a typical Chinese way:

Bean Curd with Oyster Sauce
(Serves 4)

6 cakes bean curd (fresh or canned)
4 tablespoons oyster or soy sauce
1 teaspoon monosodium glutamate
1 pinch red pepper
2 fresh scallions, minced
½ cup chopped parsley
3 tablespoons peanut oil

Cut bean curd cakes into small cubes and set aside. Mix oyster sauce, monosodium glutamate, and pepper, and have ready.

Heat peanut oil, gently stir-fry bean curd cubes, and dish up. Add the oyster sauce mixture, blend with the oil in the pan, heat, pour over bean curd. Garnish with scallions, parsley.

First, a single self-contained unit supplies both heating and cooling, saving valuable space in the basement or utility room. As if to prove this point, the split or remote unit is finding increased acceptance. It saves even more space, since the operating section is outdoors and only the heating-cooling coil is in the house.

Automatic operation

With proper controls, the heat pump can be made completely automatic. It will switch from cooling to heating to off as needed with no attention. This makes the heat pump especially appreciated in fall and spring where cool evenings or mornings call for mild heat for limited times during the day.

Since a heat pump burns no fuel, there is no combustion. The lack of combustion makes for a noticeable difference in cleanliness —the point most often mentioned by housewives. This same factor obviates the need for a flue or chimney, a fact which results in construction cost savings.

Because of its all-electric operation, the heat pump may be placed where most convenient, unhampered by many code and practical restrictions that apply to combustion apparatus.

Humidification, dehumidification, and filtration are efficiently and neatly accomplished by a heat pump. Windows never need to be opened; screens are unnecessary.

Essential to understanding the heat pump is a fundamental knowledge of the standard "refrigeration cycle"—a cycle common to everything from your household refrigerator to huge air-conditioners.

Refrigerant is the key

Indispensable to this cycle is the refrigerant, a liquid which boils at very low temperatures. Alcohol cools your skin, for example, because its relatively low boiling point makes it vaporize rapidly at body temperature. The refrigerant in an air conditioner would boil at 21° below zero, if allowed to vaporize in an open container.

On page 249 we show the operation of the refrigeration cycle in a typical room-size heat pump. To cool, this window heat pump transfers heat from the room, through the refrigerant, to the outside air. One way to get such a unit to heat the room would be to reverse its position in the window.

Instead of this, however, we reverse the normal cycle of the refrigerant in winter. We make the cold outside air give up its heat to the colder refrigerant. This heat is transferred to the air in the room which picks up the heat as it passes through the unit.

"Reverse-cycle refrigeration" thus allows us to heat an area with the same basic unit used to cool the area. Reversing the flow of refrigerant is accomplished by a special reversing valve.

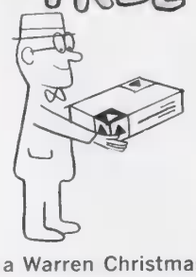
At least one model heat pump lets the refrigerant cycle alone and uses adjustable baffles and dampers to reverse the flow of air when cooling or heating is desired. Such an arrangement allows use of a simpler refrigeration cycle since no reversing valves and fewer special controls are needed.

In simplified form we have now described what is known as the air-to-air heat pump, the most generally applicable and extensively used of the several types of heat pumps. The term indicates that heat is transferred from an air source to the air to be heated.

The water-to-air pump

The only other heat pump of practical significance to the home owner is the water-to-air type which uses water underground as a heat source in winter and to carry away heat in summer. Water underground maintains a rather constant temperature—thus it is cooler than the air in summer and warmer than the air in winter.

More efficient and less costly to operate than the air-to-air heat pump, the water-to-air unit is nevertheless restricted by such things as water availability, cost, corrosion and waste problems—all becoming more pertinent and involved, legally, in many localities. Where sufficient good water is available, however, the water-to-air heat pump is very economical.



Central heat pumps operate the same as room units except that they are naturally larger and are centrally located, with ducts running to each room exactly as in warm-air heating.

Depending on geographical location, the central heat pump will operate from one or more outside and indoor thermostats. Properly set, these thermostats actuate the heat pump controls to provide full heating, partial heating, or cooling, as needed.

Heat pump installations, including unit, ductwork, electrical work, cost from $1,000 to over $3,000 for homes ranging from 900 to 2,500 square feet. Some examples:

A 2,500 sq. ft. house in northern Ohio is heated and cooled by a $2,400 installation.

CHRISTMAS TREES INC.

An 890 sq. ft. house in South Carolina uses a heat pump installed for $1,200. In California the same size house needed one costing only $950. A 1,900 sq. ft. house in Florida: $1,700.

These installation costs must be compared to the total cost of installing a conventional heating and air conditioning system, since the heat pump supplies both services, not just heating.

The extra costs

Additional costs may be incurred due to the need for suitable insulation in the home and to the possible need for increased electrical service entrance requirements. While insulation is important for homes being heated by conventional systems, it becomes mandatory for homes which are to be heated by heat pumps or for that matter, any electrical heat systems.

In tract housing, where the builder designs around heat pumps, the cost of the house with heat pumps may be only $700 more than one with conventional heating (with no air conditioning).

What about operating costs?

In some areas the heat pump will be cheaper to operate than other methods of heating, and in other areas it will be more expensive.

All other things being equal, and even in some cases where all things aren't equal, the factor which determines the feasibility of using heat pumps is the cost of electrical power. The heat pump for example may use some 17,000 kilowatt hours of electricity a year compared to, say, 750 kwh used by an electric clothes dryer.

For this reason, heat pumps are now most extensively used in TVA areas and where local power companies have lowered rates for heat pump customers. It is generally agreed that a kwh cost of more than 1.7¢ makes the heat pump prohibitively expensive, especially in those areas where there is a long and intense heating season.

The effect of climate

Climate has an important bearing on the power consumption of heat pumps and, therefore, on their operating costs. Most heat pumps are being used in those areas where winter temperatures seldom drop below 35° F. However, some newer heat pump installations are being successful in areas where zero degrees are not unusual winter temperatures.

The lower the average winter temperature, of course, the more important it is that electrical consumption and costs be considered.

The air-to-air cycle, for example, becomes a less and less efficient heater as the outside air temperature goes down. This is logical since there is less heat available in the air at lower temperatures.

At some outside temperature the heat pump will just be able to replace the amount of heat being lost by the house through the walls. At this point, called the balance point, most heat pumps have built-in electrical resistance grids (similar to the ones in a toaster, only larger), which turn on to add supplementary heat.

Room units, either window or through-the-wall, have resistance heaters that consume 1,800 or 3,000 watts; central units may have one to four banks of resistance heaters drawing 3,000 to 8,000 watts. In this case the heaters come on one at a time as needed.

So long as supplementary heat is needed less than 10% of the entire heating season, operating costs remain reasonable. When supplementary heat is needed more than 10% of the time, most authorities do not recommend use of the heat pump as the sole source of winter heat, with the possible exception of areas with extremely low power rates—less than 1.0¢ kwh.

A gas-operated heat pump is just now entering the picture and will undoubtedly affect electric rates where gas units are competitive.

Cost of operation

When climate, house construction, and utility rates are at an optimum, year-round operating costs are entirely reasonable. The 890 sq. ft. house in South Carolina mentioned earlier is heated and cooled year-round for an average monthly cost of $7.81.

The 1,900 sq. ft. Florida home is comfort-conditioned year-round for $15 per month.

Using a water-source heat pump, an average home in Florida can be heated for $57 a year compared to $77 for oil, and still more for manufactured gas or electrical resistance heat.

Personal habits of occupants can affect operating costs. The old "night turndown" pattern followed by so many has no significant effect on the cost of operating conventional heating systems. However, it greatly increases the cost of the heat pump operation.

In the morning when the thermostat is raised to call for more heat, the heat pump controls are fooled into thinking the outside temperature dropped drastically, and they call for full supplementary heat, using heavy amounts of power until the house is up to temperature. It is much more economical to keep the house at a constant temperature all 24 hours.

Service costs vary widely with some users spending even less than $10 a year for parts and labor and others experience breakdowns that cost $75 or $100, even though the units were under warranty.

Service from utilities

Reliability of heat pumps is being improved each year. However, the most general complaint against heat pumps in many areas is the lack of quick service when it is needed. To overcome this objection, the utility companies in several areas have taken service upon themselves rather than leaving service to the manufacturer of the unit.

When should you consider buying a heat pump?

In the first place, consider it only if you need or desire cooling in summer. The heat pump is not competitive in price at the present time for the heating operation alone. (However, the picture can change even in this regard if the cost of fossil fuels—gas, oil, coal—continues to rise while electricity drops in relative price.)

If you do plan to pay for cooling anyway, study the factors affecting operating cost of heat pumps in your area. Consult utility companies for the best electrical rates available and for a reliable estimate of operating cost in your geographical location. Manufacturers of heat pumps can give you a recommendation on the balance point in your climate and what the expected use of supplementary heat in a normal winter will be.

If the operating costs seem reasonable, consult a reliable heating-air conditioning contractor, one who has had experience with heat pumps. With warm and cool air passing through the same ducts, it is important that they be sized properly and that the outlets be properly placed around the rooms.

How to use steel wool's rough (or gentle) touch

• Steel wool is made by shaving wire or sheet steel with a chisel-like blade. The shavings are pulled off in strands, formed into strips, and then into pads. The cutting edge of the blade that shaves the steel is serrated at precise intervals, which determine the grade of wool created. The average homeowner is interested only in Fine (No. 0), Medium (No. 1), Medium-Coarse (No. 2), and Coarse (No. 3), although the professional wood finisher has available a range from No. 00 through No. 0000.

In woodworking, steel wool provides an excellent finishing tool, for it is both abrasive and pliable. Coarse and medium grades may be used for rough finishing when it is difficult to get sandpaper into grooves or curves. The fine grade can be used after sanding to make any surface really smooth.

Fine steel wool is also ideally suited for "dry" finishing between coats of paint, varnish, and shellac to remove paint ripples and embedded dust specks. The gentle polishing action of metallic strands reduces the high gloss of a final coat to a satin finish.

Steel wool should always be applied with the grain. The perfectionist may prefer to place a block over the soft pad to distribute pressure uniformly, but the pads themselves are usually firm enough to do an acceptable job.

On the negative side, the small metal pieces that break off during applications will rust if they become wet and are left untended. They should be removed with a vacuum cleaner.

Steel wool's ability to hold liquids like a sponge increases its cleaning power. It can carry additional cleaning aids—such as scouring powder, soap, kerosene, turpentine, oil, and paint and varnish remover. The table below recommends grades for common household jobs steel wool will do.

Will your house be on safe ground?

Before you buy or build, check for unstable soil conditions that may cause trouble later

By RALPH O. HILL

• Nothing looks more solid than a piece of ground, but the good earth can present a deceptive surface. Too many people, after investing their money and labor in new houses and landscaped lots, have seen their property afflicted by the disturbing results of unstable soil conditions.

Soil failures affect assorted areas, from costly hillside lots chosen for their view of the sea to large development tracts spread across flat land. In some cases, water seeps into basements, ugly cracks break through the plaster, doors and windows stick, and stoves and refrigerators wobble unevenly on slanting floors. Where the damage is severe, the residents have had parts of their yard carried off by small landslides that may even include the ground beneath the house. One owner uneasily watched the ground on the slope above sagging progressively for several years before it finally slid down into his back yard.

Such failures are always expensive and discouraging, and most of them could have been avoided if the buyer had recognized the warning symptoms. Inadequate soil is such a relatively new problem in residential areas, that even a practical, careful shopper may be unwary. Although engineers have routinely investigated in detail the soil at the sites of bridges, dams, airports, and the like, they were little concerned about housing sites until after World War II.

Good lots for small building construction were abundant, and soil failures were rare among them. But with the postwar flood of population into congested urban areas, real estate prices soared, and every available square inch of ground was pressed into service for housing sites. Vast fields of new homes bloomed suddenly on hillsides, beaches, old lake bottoms, and hastily-covered city dump sites. As more home builders sought escape from crowded cities, beautiful country houses appeared in new, untried areas.

Many of these lots were entirely sound, where there were no difficult soil conditions, or where they were adequately examined and the dangers eliminated by skillful design of the structures. Wherever the ground was inadequate, however, trouble began to develop in a few years. The cost of repairing the damage is frequently disproportionate if the property value has dropped. Temporary repairs are often the only practical recourse.

How can you protect yourself against such soil failures when you shop for a lot or a house? The expense of a professional soil investigation is usually prohibitive for the individual buyer, but fortunately there are simpler ways of detecting potential dangers. When you are seriously considering the purchase of a certain lot or house, you can watch for signs as readable as the fever, rash, or cough that tells you your child is sick.

Look for soggy wet spots.

1. Check the site topography. The visible contours of the ground can often tell you a great deal. If the lot is on a hillside, or a river, lake, or ocean shore, pay particular attention to the steepness of the site and its vicinity, to the general type of soil in the area and the water conditions to which it is subjected. Steep slopes, coupled with clay-type soils that become saturated by rains, lawn-watering and underground seepage, are factors that encourage sliding, bowed retaining walls, and cracked basement walls.

In an area of heavy rainfall, check for evidence of water run-off paths. Water will always follow the ditches and valleys to the low-lying areas. If your site is located in such a natural drainage path, you may very well be flooded out in times of heavy rainfall and run-off.

The presence of springs and soft wet spots at the base of banks and slopes is significant, because they are produced by underground seepage which can cause trouble.

If the lot is on flat land, one of the main points to check is the elevation of your site in relation to those around it. If your spot is the lowest point, by even a small amount, water will tend to collect on it unless adequate provision has been made to draw off excess water in that precise location.

2. Examine the existing buildings and improvements. It is important to check the age of the real estate developments in the area. After a few years, when slide and settlement symptoms have had time to appear, you may find revealing details in the structures on or near the lot.

Look at the foot of lawn slopes for the permanent wet, soggy spots that indicate underground water drainage from above. Retaining walls may be bowed or cracked if they have not been properly designed to withstand the pressure of earth and water upon them. Slumping and unevenness in the yard area suggests that loose "fill" material (soil originally removed from the basement site) has been used to build up a sloping lot and has not been properly compacted, so that rain and lawn-watering have damaged it by saturation. Look closely at the house itself for cracks or bowing in the basement walls. You may even notice water seepage through these cracks.

On many hillside lots, the house foundations have been built to rest half on solid ground and half on poorly compacted fill. When the fill becomes saturated with water, its capacity to support the foundations is reduced. This will result in settlement of that part of the house founded on fill, a condition indicated by cracks in basement and plaster walls, by sloping floors, or by doors and windows that stick or will not close. To check the evenness of a floor, roll a marble across it. If the floor slants, the marble will leave its original course and roll in the direction of the slope.

On flat ground, these same signs may indicate that the site is over an improperly filled city dump, swamp, or marsh, and the underlying soft soil has settled unevenly. Some of these flaws, of course, might be due to the construction rather than the soil, but any of them should alert the potential buyer.

3. Avail yourself of local sources of information. Many facts that are not readily observable on the site, especially in a dry season, can be learned by asking pertinent questions. In any developed areas, ask the older residences such questions as:

Check with neighbors.

"Has there been any evidence of sliding in the past few years during rainy seasons?"

"Have you noticed any cracked plaster or walls, water seepage, sloping floors, sticking doors and windows, cracked or bowed retaining walls?"

"During a heavy rain, where does the water go?"

"Have you ever been flooded out?"

If the area is new, you can get useful information from (a) the city engineer; (b) the nearest FHA engineering department; (c) a reputable builder who has had construction experience in that area; or (d) your architect or builder.

If your city is one of those whose building code requires (as too many do not) some type of soil investigation in suspicious areas before construction starts on housing developments, the city engineer's office can tell you about it. You can usually learn here, in any case, the history of the area and the general nature of the soil condition.

Federal housing agencies, such as FHA, are sometimes directly concerned with housing developments that involve regrading of the land with deep or extensive cuts or fills. The FHA requires that all such grading and resulting slopes be properly controlled to prevent uneven soil settlement, landslides, erosion, etc. Since their building requirements are rather rigid, they will generally be aware of the general soil conditions in the area.

Your architect or builder is, of course, your most direct source of information. A competent, ethical man will, as a matter of course, have assured himself of the adequate strength of the subsoil before building on it, either through experience in the area or professional soil investigation. A thorough investigation isn't necessary in an older residential section, of course, where you and your builder can observe the condition of older structures. In new, untried areas, however, where any suspicious circumstances are present, the seller should be prepared to assure the safety of the ground, even if it requires this expenditure.

The selling agency should be prepared to answer the following questions, wherever they are applicable:

a. Has a soils report been written for this area? If so, what were the results; if not, what is known about the soil conditions, and how is it known?

b. If there are any of the indications of slide susceptibility in the area, what design measures have been taken to eliminate the danger?

c. Will your house be located on a filled swamp, city dump site, or lake bottom area? If so, have adequate design measures been taken to eliminate the damaging effect of later ground settlement?

d. If sliding or settling occurs in the future, with deleterious results, will you be protected financially? (Many insurance companies now refuse to insure against slides.)

If you are not entirely satisfied with the answers you receive here, don't overlook the other suggested sources.

4. Look the prospect over on a rainy day. The time-honored American custom of driving around to look at houses on a warm Sunday provides a delightful afternoon and a good casual survey of the market. But when you find yourself courting a particular house or lot, it is only prudent to look at it in the cold gray light before you propose. An inspection on a wet day, or after a rainy season, can be very revealing. You can observe the direction of water run-off, collecting spots for water, seepage into basements or garages, and possibilities of mud and slides. You're going to live through bad weather as well as good with your home, and it's better to know in advance how it will pass the test.

What happens in the rain?

Because these problems have only recently grown to alarming proportions, common construction practice has not yet adapted itself to cope with them. City building codes are not widely modernized to include the necessary precautions, and many builders, either through lack of knowledge or for the sake of economy, overlook them entirely. Until the responsibility is clearly delegated, you, the buyer, can protect yourself by looking closely, asking thoughtful questions, and watching for doubtful conditions. Then you can feel confident that your house is there to stay.

es that range from dry and pale rich and tawny. Taking them by one:

Sercial is made from a grape that came from the Rhineland where it was (and still is) known as the Reisling. From Madeira's volcanic soil and semi-tropical sun it has acquired its own distinctive character, which makes it entirely different from its ancestral grape. When young, Sercial is a harsh wine, but it mellows with age and develops a nutlike flavor by which it can be distinguished. A dry wine, it is an excellent aperitif and ranks with the best of the Spanish Finos sherries. It is dryer and more subtle most people feel, than the dryest of white ports.

Verdelho is a richer, more golden wine, but often not too sweet to be drunk before dinner. It is an exquisite accompaniment or flavoring for soups. For a long time the ancestry of the grape could not be traced, but now most authorities agree that it was originally related to the Verdea grape of Northern Italy from which the light, delicate, faintly-scintillant Verdiccio wines are made.

Bual or boal, as we sometimes see it written, was the special favorite of the most famous of literary Baltimoreans, H. L. Mencken. At the mention of fine, mellow, rich Buals runs like a rich refrain through American journals and novels of the past. The original grapes of this great wine came from Burgundy. Like a Burgundy, Bual is rich and luscious. It is the most prolific grower among the grapes of Madeira and many consider it "the most complete and best balanced wine of the island." It is served after a meal and is the Madeira most often used in sauces and desserts.

Malmsey is the richest and sweetest of Madeiras, almost like a sweet liqueur. The grapes that make it originally came from the island of Crete. They require a dry soil and intense heat, so that the grapes are not gathered until they become almost raisin-like in character. This grape requires constant attention and is cultivated on stony terraced cliffs close to the sea.

Rainwater Madeira is a name that many who have never heard of any other type will recognize. But no one is quite clear about what it actually is and how it differs from other Madeiras.

It seems likely that some special method of treating Madeiras was "invented," or more likely adapted, by an eminent sportsman and connoisseur of Savannah, Georgia, named William Habersham. On the roof of his home, he had a glass-covered conservatory where certain secret rites were performed involving "some business of rotating the wines in the sun."

In Madeira we were told that some of the old farm families have always placed small, elongated casks of wine in open courtyards where the wines would be subject to sun and weather.

Said Charles Bellows, whose active life as a Madeira expert was synonymous with Rainwater's highest fame: "In America, I do not know if what causes Madeira to become Rainwater has been scientifically explained, but it is a freak condition caused by lack of color in the grape, sudden changes of temperature or other natural causes." In any case, it is so rare an occurrence that the true Rainwater Madeiras are highly prized as curiosities. But there are a number of pale, dryish Madeiras, generally Verdelhos, that are sold commercially as Rainwater Madeiras. Very fine, they are, too, and not wildly expensive, either.

Isle of Wine

The island of Madeira, we discovered, is not entirely what the post cards, travel folders and movies had led one to expect. For all its semi-tropical luxuriance, it is harsh, demanding, stony. This is a land of deep gorges where the wild seas are caught and the angry sprays leap high into the air. Every inch of terraced garden and vineyard has been wrested from the black, volcanic tufa.

But all over the island there is evidence of the early English-Portuguese alliances. The wild orchids are caught among waves of English roses. Blue spikes of delphinium grow close to the sultry amaryllis. On neat white Colonial buildings and garden walls, masses of bougainvilleas riot. Mountain paths flame on either side with fuchsias.

In the autumn, when we were there, the vineyards added their color. One side of a mountain would be draped as if in crimson pennants, another clothed in orange.

Funchal is the seaport and principal town. On its steep, winding streets, there are flower women in bright musical-comedy costumes and a few costumed drivers of basketry carts drawn by bullocks with bright ribbons wound around their horns. There is a breath-taking perpendicular street that rises straight up the side of a mountain from the center of the town. Down this, tourists hurtle in basket bob-sleds at heart-stopping speed but with amazing safety all the same, since the baskets are always under expert guidance.

On a street only five feet wide with grapevines holding hands across it are the headquarters of the Madeira Wine Association. Here every traveler makes his way to browse and sip, often acquiring knowledge as well as wines to taste right there or take away.

Educating the Palate

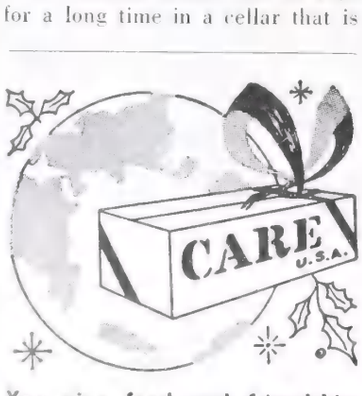
Each day, after tastings in the lodge of the Madeira Wine Association, at luncheons and dinners, in the homes of the great Madeira families, our education continued.

"A Madeira should not be kept for a long time in a cellar that is too cold; it likes best about s enty degrees."

"A spell of cool weather, not freezing weather, will make wine bell-bright. Too much co on the other hand, clouds it."

"In its youth, a Sercial or V delho is pale in color, like a bro diamond. Later it takes on a da er sheen."

"Although the flavor of Madei is often described as nutty, the is not the bitterness, not the ran quality that you find in sher If you are reminded of the flav of nuts, it is not so much an almo as a hazelnut or a pecan."



Once we lunched at a dark m hogany table stretched to acco modate twenty persons—a table polished that it glistened like lake of endlessly deep water, a the place mats of Madeira e broidery were so fine and frail th they seemed almost like mist up the water. That day an eighty-yea old Sercial was served. It was complete experience, an adventu that seemed to involve not on aroma and flavor but a complex subtle but definite sensations. C the tip of the tongue—a tingl almost a roughness.

"Notice, too, that there is a fee ing at the back of the throat whic makes you want to take two three swallows. This is a tribute t the dryness of the wine."

Everyone gropes for words to d scribe the character of the gre Madeiras. "silken and yet lively "never acid and yet it leaves passing shadow of sour on the pa ate."

Even the most ancient wine even the richest Malmseys leav this cool, fresh, clean, vaguely ci rus tang—almost like a celestia lemon drop. It is one of the way that you can distinguish the diffe ence between sherries and Ma deiras, although sometimes it i quite difficult. Duels have bee fought, so they say, about whethe a certain old wine really was sherry or a Madeira. "Very ofte the age of old great wines bring them together as to taste, so that i is very hard to decide. . . ."

Only a few vintage Madeiras re main and they are rare and ex pensive. Most are made in accord ance with the solera system—the mixing of new wines with old. This custom originated in 1860 when, after a disastrous disease and a later plague of insects had almost destroyed the vineyards, the wine makers of Madeira began to follow the example of the sherry makers. Thus the old wines were stretched by adding new ones of like char acter which gradually through the rs take on the qualities of the aristocrats. The date of the era is not the year when the e was made, but is the year of oldest wine. The average age the Madeiras in soleras of 1815. instance, is estimated to be ut eighty years.

Vintage Madeiras, though rare, still to be found. A notable col- tion of ancient vintages, includ- a 1792, are now available in w York City at Sherry Wine & irits Company, at prices ranging m about $15 to $25 a bottle.

It is generally agreed that a Ma- ra lives longer than any other ne. "There does not seem to be y age limit to fine Madeiras." dré Simon told us when we vis- d him in London. "They retain ir vitality, their full color to an redible age—seventy, eighty, a ndred, sometimes even longer." Madeiras are amazingly robust. though it may, to the nose of an pert, lose some of its pristine ality, even an old Madeira can kept after the bottle is opened pecially if it is put into smaller ttles. Most people recommend cool room temperature. In any se, whether in the bottle or the canter. Madeira should be kept ay from direct heat, and what is en more important, out of direct nlight.

ooking with Madeira

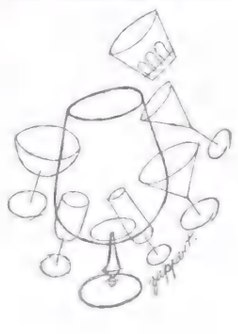
Of all the wines of the world adeira is the most prized by fine oks, especially in France, Scan- navia, and to a lesser degree in ngland. In our own country in the th and 19th Centuries and even the early part of the 20th Cen- ry, sauces and aspics, wine jelly, lves' head, turtle, ox-tail and ack bean soups, and consommés ere regularly given a blessing of adeira.

No other wine has quite so much impart to a dish or such per- asive aromas. André Simon be- ves that the heating to which the ine is submitted during its devel- oment makes it particularly amen- le. Unlike sherry, which should added at the last and never oiled, Madeira can be cooked for long time. It never seems to turn itter as sometimes happens with rtified wines.

It is quite proper to use a young ine to flavor a meat loaf, perhaps, make Sauce Madère, or to make ivine scallopine of veal, for the ibtleties of an aged wine would e obscured in the cooking. How- ver, when the wine appears in an spic or in a Madeira jelly, you ay want to show off an older wine. The different types of Madeira should be selected to complement different foods. A more or less youthful Sercial is considered ideal for flavoring broths of various types. Cooking deepens and mellows the flavors. It is also considered perfect for any type of fish.

Verdelho is widely favored for consommés. At the fabulously beautiful mountain resort of the Seven Sighs at Sintra, near Lisbon, they warm a little Verdelho in a silver ladle, set the wine ablaze, and pour it flaming into a clear gold chicken broth. "It is to dream. . . ."

In the white-washed country dining room of an inn in the mountains on the north side of the island, we were served a platter of turkey and country-cured ham, and set around the platter were quivering squares of a glittery aspic flavored with Bual.



Madeiras, and especially Buals and Malmseys, have a natural affinity for bananas, mangoes, passion fruit, and almost all other tropical or semi-tropical fruits. They also go very well with peaches. As a matter of fact, a ripe peach was often used in the old days in Georgia to clear the palate at tastings.

Madeiras Here and Now

The Madeira shippers themselves and the Portuguese Government surround the wines with elaborate precautions to insure against frauds and imperfections. Once you have become acquainted with the various categories, it is not at all difficult in the United States to get the wine you want.

A complete indoctrination to Madeiras is readily available right now through the four Royal Dukes Madeiras, shipped by the firm of Blandy. They are: The Duke of Sussex Sercial, Duke of Cambridge Rainwater, Duke of Cumberland Bual, and Duke of Clarence Malmsey.

A number of Cossart and Gordon Madeiras are coming into this country. Leacock is sending notable wines and Madeira embroideries, too. Some of the Welsh Brothers' Madeiras are here. Though perhaps better known for their sherries and ports, the noted English firms, Harvey and Sandeman, are shipping some fine Madeiras to America.

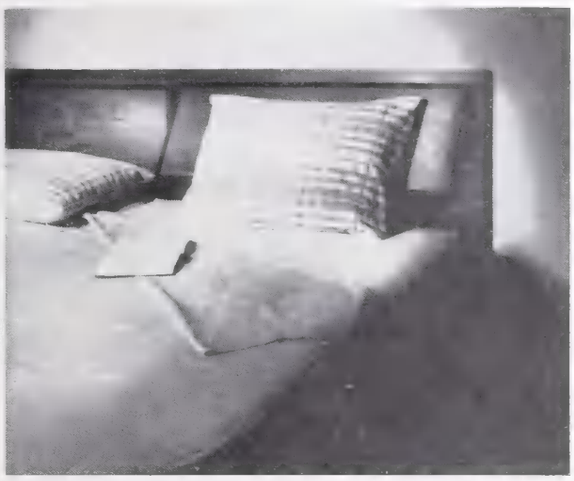
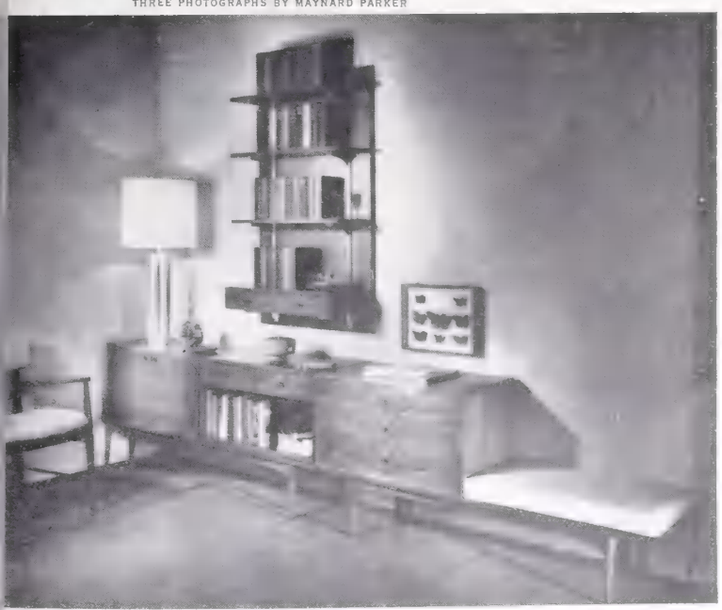
Structural base of walnut stained almost black, is used with white marble to make a handsome coffee table (above) or with a cabinet to become a low room divider (right). Same grouping could be used against a wall as a storage unit. The cabinet can be fitted with hi-fi components, store records, or game equipment, etc. It is made of walnut with sliding panels of translucent white plastic. Cabinet and base are 66" long, 16" deep. Over-all height is 29". Designed by William Paul Taylor for Sligh-Lowry.



Folding chairs that match stationary ones are a new answer to the extra seating problem. The folding mechanism is so unobtrusive that it is difficult to distinguish the folding chairs from the stationary ones. The table is 48" long, 34" wide, and has a 12"-wide leaf that may be added. By Stakmore.



A slender vanity that hangs on the wall consists of a white frosted glass shelf, mirror, and narrow vertical cabinet of walnut to hold bottles and jars. It could be used in a bedroom or in a hallway or foyer. Its height is 50", width 30". The bench, cushioned in polyurethane foam, is the same width as the vanity, 16" deep and 15" high. How Hi-Fi test records can point the way to better listening

An hour with a test record will tell you more about improving the performance of your phonograph than months of ordinary listening

By CARROLL C. CALKINS

■ The great value of a test record is the way it can put a finger on the bugbear of creeping distortion, and point out what it takes to improve the sound of your phonograph. Even the best equipment is subject to this electronic malady. It can develop so slowly you may not even know it exists.

Why worry, you might say, about distortion you can't hear? Well, you do hear it, you just don't know it.

The first symptom of creeping distortion is loss of interest in recorded music. If you play your records less than before, chances are it's because the sound doesn't seem as full and rewarding as it once was. You don't think there's anything really wrong, it's j that it doesn't seem quite worth effort to get the records out and them on. If this is the case, yo better check your equipment. not likely you've actually lost y interest in music.

The loss of fidelity can come slowly, and the ear is so adapta and forgiving that we don't c sciously know it is happening. I test records can point it out i hurry. And even a small loss fidelity can take the fine edge the enjoyment of a record. A sli rumble, a little hum, or a drop frequency range, and the sparl and life can go out of the mu and make the difference betwe

GLOSSARY: If you aren't sure of the following terms, it will pay to learn what they mean before using test records.

Centimeters per second (cm per sec.): A measurement of loudness stated in terms of the speed at which the stylus vibrates back and forth as it tracks the grooves. Seven cm per sec. is the volume generally used for monophonic LP records.

Decibels or DB's: This is a ratio of the intensity of one sound to another. The level (volume) of a signal (sound impulse) on the best records is about 60 DB higher than the volume of the background noise inherent in the equipment. With a 60 DB spread between the background noise and the sound, you'll probably never hear the noise. But if the noise in this "signal to noise ratio" is only 20 DB down (lower), it will intrude on the sound of the music.

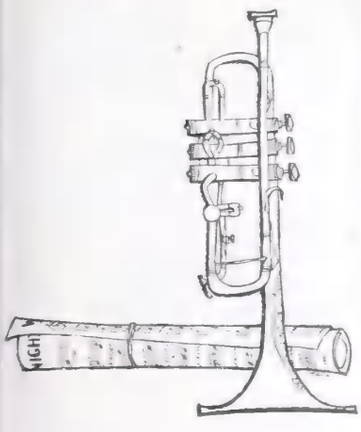
Equalization curve: For various technical reasons the very highest and lowest notes on a record have less volume than the mid-range. The playback equipment is designed to increase the volume at each end to make for this. The exact point and degr of increase makes up the equalizati curve. The recording indu-try h adopted a standard equalization curv called the RIAA curve. The tests t whether or not your equipment co pensates properly for the variatio

Frequency response: Simply t range of sound, from high to lo that a phonograph will deliver. your equipment can faithfully repr duce sounds as low as 60 cycles a as high as 12,000 with relatively equ volume, it can be considered exce lent in response.

Transient response: Indicates ho quickly the equipment can recov from one signal and deliver the nex If, for instance, you can hear eac click of castanets, or stick tap of drum roll as clearly separate sound the transient response is good. If th sounds mush together, transien response is inadequate.

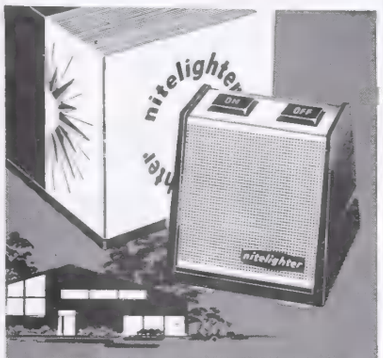
omething you look forward to earing and something you can do ithout.

These subtle, but debilitating hortcomings and distortions are xactly the kind of thing test recrds are designed to reveal.



It may seem strange, on the face f it, to expect a phonograph susected of inefficiency to be efficient nough to reveal its own shortcomngs by means of a record. Well, his is a limitation but there are ome ingenious tests by which poor quipment can be made to tell on self. And, except for an electronic nalysis with special instruments, est records are the best way to heck the performing efficiency of our equipment.

It's only fair to point out one of he risks of testing. If you prove o yourself that your phonograph is ot doing justice to the music, you on't be happy with it until it's ixed. Test records not only reveal hortcomings in fidelity, but often ndicate exactly what's causing hem. You may need nothing more han a new stylus (needle), or the urntable may be faulty or possibly here is distortion in the amplifier. But even though the remedy is expensive, it can be a great blessing. t could put you back on the track f high fidelity and the brilliance of ecorded music at its best.



In addition to this, some of the ecords will explain what high idelity is and why it sounds so nuch like live music. You'll hear ow incredibly high a tone of 15,000 cycles really is, and the pulating depth of a bass note of 20 ycles, and you may also discover hat extreme range in frequency is ot as important as you thought.

Some of the instructions that ome with test records are very informative—apart from the record. The best of these are noted on the ecord reviews that follow.

A few tests, such as for frequency range and equalization curve, are ncluded on almost all records. (See the glossary if you don't know hese terms.) Other tests appear n only one or two. You'll notice that no single record includes all tests, and you may want more than one disc.

Some records are all business and have only non-musical tests, some include a few musical examples as a test aid; others are mostly music, and contribute little more to evaluating equipment than any good musical recording.

The following test records require nothing more than the equipment to play them on—and an attentive ear. The monophonic discs can be played by any stereophonic machine; so this is primarily a review of monophonic records. Some, you will notice, have monophonic tests on one side, stereo tests on the other. You can't play the stereo side on a monophonic machine without damaging the record—except on some very expensive professional equipment.

Most test records are the 12-inch size and include a number of tests on one disc.

The Components Corporation, however, makes 7-inch records each designed for a specific task. The first six on the following list are theirs. A clear explanation of each test is included on the record. Note, too, that the Electronics World is a 7-inch multiple-test record.

Wow! and Flutter too. (Components Corp. No. 1106) $.89

A clear complete explanation of what wow and flutter are, how they sound, the causes and most of the cures. Wow, evidenced by unevenness in a sound that should be steady, is common on all but the best changers and turntables. Although it is recommended that an oscilloscope be used for critical testing, the record can be used successfully without equipment. The only possible objection to this disc is the commercials for some of the company's other products.

Quiet Please! (Components Corp. No. 1107) $.89

With this record you can easily hear any extraneous noise your equipment may make while running. There is a band of silent grooves which will reveal any hum, stylus scratch, or turntable rumble. There is also instruction on the record for checking your turntable in case it should reveal rumble.

How's Your Stylus? (Components Corp. No. 1108) $.89

Here's a foolproof way to tell whether or not your stylus (needle) needs replacement. There's an explanation on one side of the record and two separate bands of grooves on the other with which to make the test. If the inner band sounds less clear than the outer one, it's time for a new stylus.

Tracking special. (Components Corp. No. 1109) $.89

The problem of tone arm resonance (extraneous sound from tone arm) is thoroughly explained, and there are a series of test tones at the frequencies which most often cause a tone arm to vibrate. If a tone arm rides all the tracks without adding to the sound, there's no problem in this department.

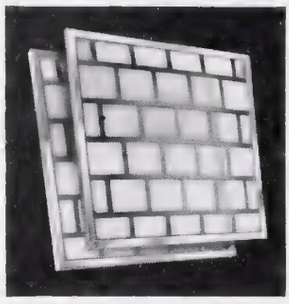
Vertical Lateral Response. (Components Corp. No. 1110) $.89

Considerable flexibility (compliance) is required for proper pick-up performance. With this record you test the compliance by matching the volume of sound from a series of differing bands to the volume of a master reference band. Sounds complicated, but the recorded explanation makes it clear.

What! no hum? (Components Corp. No. 1111) $.89

Three typical kinds of hum are demonstrated: harmonic, 60 cycle and 120 cycle. Then, to measure the loudness of hum in your equipment, each kind is played at a specified low volume. If you can hear the recorded hum above the inherent hum in the equipment you know your equipment has less. If your system is so noisy you can't hear the recorded hum, it is too noisy for good reproduction.

Electronics World Test Record (No. 1) $1.00



This 7-inch record has one side for monophonic tests; the other is designed especially for stereophonic equipment. The mono side includes the band-to-band test for stylus wear, a test for proper equalization and frequency signals from 40 to 15,000 cycles. This side can also be played on stereophonic

Lafayette Hi Fi Stereo-Monaural Test Record 1959 $2.95

This is a 12-inch record with tests for monophonic equipment on one side, stereo on the other. The mono side tests for worn stylus, RIAA equalization, and extraneous sound from stylus or tone arm. It also has test bands for the special job of tuning the ports of a bass reflex speaker. This is done with repeated tones that sweep from 300 cycles down to 20 cycles with cricket markers at specified intervals. It is also useful for checking bass response.

The stereo side has tests for cartridge compliance, RIAA equalization, channel balance, and turntable rumble. Instructions for use are printed on the record jacket and on a separate sheet.

This record is sold through Lafayette Radio stores, but is also available by mail from Lafayette Radio, 165-08 H, Liberty Ave., Jamaica 33, New York.

Urania-Popular Science Test Records, Volumes I and II (Urania Records) $3.98 each

These two discs comprise the most complete collection of tests available from one source.

Volume 1 has tests for RIAA equalization, bass response, extraneous noise, turntable speed, uneven frequency response (peaking), and for good measure—and to fill space—a sound effects quiz and some selections from a music box. It also includes a sustained tone of International Musical A (440 cps). If the pitch of this tone doesn't match a 440 tuning fork, the turntable speed is off.

Volume 2, subtitled, True Sound of Musical Tones, has more general information about the nature of sound and high fidelity than specific tests. Musical instruments are used instead of test tones and above all else, it helps you appreciate the full dimension that high fidelity brings to recorded sound.

Musical excerpts are used for checking transient response, dynamic range, and balance. But unless you know how the music should sound (compared with a live performance), it is difficult to evaluate degrees of distortion—except for obviously poor sound reproduction.

There are complete instructions th on the record jacket and in accompanying pamphlet.

is Is High Fidelity (Vox DL 0) $6.95

Aptly titled, this record shows effects of full frequency, com-red to limited range by playing od and bad passages side by side. shows the wonders high fidelity s wrought, and you're sure to be pressed by the progress of the . The record and accompanying oklet, quite rightly, stress the portance of balance. They make convincing argument against ex-ded frequency range at the ex-nse of smooth, well balanced sponse.

Various distortions are illus-ted by musical example. The keup of an orchestra and what's quired to reproduce the sound is ll explained. There's also an in-rmative section on the nature of und, the effect of acoustics and microphone placement and bal-ce in recording.

Along with the record comes a -page booklet which explains at high fidelity is and how and y it works. Some of the technical pects are not as simply stated as ey might be, but there is a tre-ndous amount of valuable infor-ation here.

alscosonic Stereo and Monaural udiotester (WS 300) $3.98

The mono side includes tests for lus wear, frequency response. mble, tone arm resonance, and termodulation distortion. The ereo tests are for frequency nge (for each channel), stylus d pickup alignment, channel paration and balance, rumble, d tone arm resonance.

This is a good all-around set of ecific tests with excellent under-andable instructions for their use.

heck and Double Check (West-inster) $10

This impressive package (record d booklet in fold-out container), a delight to use. The straight sts for response and dynamics are ll designed and the musical il-strations of other principles of und are of exceptional fidelity.

The music (the double check) is as much for demonstration as for testing, and will make good equipment sound truly wonderful.

The book is valuable on its own. Written by John Conoly, who has years of experience making the complexities of high fidelity understandable in lay terms, is an interesting exposition of the essentials of high fidelity. The section to be read as the record plays explains exactly what to listen for, and there's no confusion about what you are hearing—and how to evaluate it.

Distortion in equalization, dynamic range, transient response, and definition are checked, and a good deal of attention is given to balance of various kinds, such as fundamental tones and overtones, equality of instruments in ensemble, a choir of voices, solo instruments within an orchestra, and balance within a hall. Some principles of recording are explained too. These are sure to increase your appreciation and respect for this fine art.

Group them beside a garden eye-catcher—both the bulbs and background will count for more

• You'll be surprised next spring at how big an effect you can get with just a few bulbs, if you follow these three rules: Group them together so they show up as one strong visual element. Put the show near by, where it will demand attention. And, finally, plant them beside a permanent garden highlight; each will make the other more important. Put the bulbs, for example, at the base of a tree or retaining wall; beside a flight of steps; or at the edge of a terr Or pot them up to use in dramatic grouping in spring.

When you're working with ju few bulbs, get the largest size best quality you can. Six g strong flowers will give you m more for your time and effort t a dozen scraggly ones. The su of top quality bulbs is limi so it's a good idea to get th soon. You can plant any time f now until the ground freezes.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

A showy display can be created with just a few bulbs, if they are combined with another landscape feature such as this clump of birch. Without the tree this small group of narcissus would be insignificant, but in combination the two add up to an effect that is eye-catching and important.

A small drift of pecies tulips looks atural here beside an dging of rock. The owers are just the ight size for their ocation and have een planted to accent he shape of the rock.

Integrated planting helps pull the two tree trunks together visually to make them seem part of a larger composition. Dense planting makes a strong impact even though bulbs are small.

A few bulbs go a long way when they are as dramatic as these bi-color narcissus (var. Aruba has white petals, orange-red crowns). The handsome rock helps attract attention.

Dear Reader:

I have had a real thrill and pleasure in discovering Wool "O" rugs. They combine the most remarkable number of unusual qualities I have ever seen. I didn't know I could find rugs so versatile. It just seems as if they 'have everything'. Their luxurious surface yarns are made of 100% virgin wool in patterns that actually stir your pulse. And, oh, the colors! In solid or combinations of colors to fulfill one's fondest dreams. I found lovely soft pastel shades blending into rich harmonies of greens, browns, reds, blues, yellows, neutral greys. And also bright, sunny hues that would bring romance even to the darkest corner. Wool "O" rugs just inspire your imagination. Only looking at them gave me a dozen ideas for redecorating. Now I can give each room its own personality.

These wonderful rugs are made by expert American craftsmen in all sizes up to 600 square feet and in all shapes—oval, round, rectangular, square or irregular, and I was astonished to learn that special styles can be custom-made to one's own color specifications. These fine rugs will always lie flat and they are completely reversible for extra years of wear. All genuine Wool "O" rugs have been guaranteed as advertised since 1922. It's no wonder discriminating women are turning to Wool "O" for their floorcovering answer in today's modern home. I know now why Wool "O" is called "The Only Rug of its Kind"! Oh, yes,—Wool "O" rugs are obtainable in rug departments of better stores everywhere.

What you can do now about next summer's bugs

Such diversities as feeding birds, enriching soil, spading, and burning trash can all help stave off next year's pests

By WILLIAM ALVADORE BUCK

• Without question the number of insects and other pests that plague gardens and gardeners has increased enormously since I was a boy. On the other hand, it can be said that the gardener's battle with the bugs becomes easier every year. Depend upon it: the human race will never go down in action against the inch worm and the two-spotted mite. We have the upper hand decisively. But to keep our advantage calls for the enlistment of all the friendly forces we can muster, plus a little effort on our own.

There are a number of things we can do before spring to reduce the insect problem for next year: Do something for the birds and they will amply repay you. Install a bird bath, a feeding station, nesting houses for bluebirds and wrens: above all, if you can, plant a thicket where they may nest and retire, secure to gossip in the heat of the day between raids on the bugs.

Even insect eaters like a change of diet, and there are a number of plants whose fruits attract them: for example, shadblow, Virginia creeper, spicebush, dogwood, holly, juniper, bayberry, mulberry, sumac, elderberry, sassafras, and wild grapes. Some birds actually eat several times their own weight in bugs every day. You have no obligation to love the noisy and aggressive starling, but did you ever notice how thoroughly starlings will search a plot of earth?

Deep fall or winter spading will kill many a grub and cutworm. These larva commonly hibernate about a foot under the surface of the earth, and turning them up to suffer winter's ills is too much for them to survive.

Grubs are often thick in untilled land or sod, so if you are going to plant in a new spot, fall plowing seems particularly advisable. Leave the ground in the rough, without raking. The vegetation growing on the spot will decay ready to feed the spring planting, the frost will permeate the earth and mellow it, so that it will better store winter rain and snow, and the gardener who does the work while his muscles are in summer shape will suffer no Charley horse in the spring. However, you can purchase poison baits in the form of pellets which are effective against cutworms, sowbugs, snails, and slugs. I scatter them two or three times every year.

Make sure that your soil is well enriched with organic matter, whether you use it as a mulch on top of the soil, or as a winter mulch to be turned in when the daffodils bloom or interred with the fall spading. Fall is the right and proper time to dig in fresh manure or new autumn leaves. Winter rotting restores the balance of fertility, particularly the nitrogen balance.

SOME theorists say that if your soil is well enough fruited with organic matter, you will never need to spray for disease or pests. From my observations in my own garden I fancy there is something in the theory, but I will not swallow the whole jugful. I have seen the smaller and weaker plants in a row attacked by insects, but the bugs were not always so selective. I am sure that good health assists a plant to ward off disease but sometimes the best-fed fall to rusts and blights and sundry other ills.

Behind the belief that insects choose to feed on ill-nourished subjects are two interesting theories. Louis Bromfield of Malabar Farm once conjectured that many insects, particularly beetles, were by nature scavengers, and that they preferred the sweetness of decaying matter to that which was wholly alive and healthy.

The other theory holds that in a rich soil plants become themselves insecticides or insect repellents. A good soil, full of organic decay, is almost sure to contain all of the trace elements, and a plant rooted in that soil will store more of these elements in its cellulose walls than it really needs, or could endure, inside the cell.

No insect can stomach a dose of copper, for example, or lead, arsenate, selenium, or fluorine, not even a trace. Plants growing in old worked-out land may not be able to collect enough of such trace elements to become resistant. Without question, adding humus to the land will increase the general resistance of plants growing there.

Chemists have been doing some very interesting experiments in this line. By adding selenium in precise doses to soil they have made carnations and chrysanthemums powerful insect killers. Don't you try it on vegetables, though, the poison could affect people, too. In some cases, it may be worth while to add to the soil, in addition to humus, one application of a fertilizer that contains some of the trace elements. The experiments have shown promise for the gardener who does not like to spray.

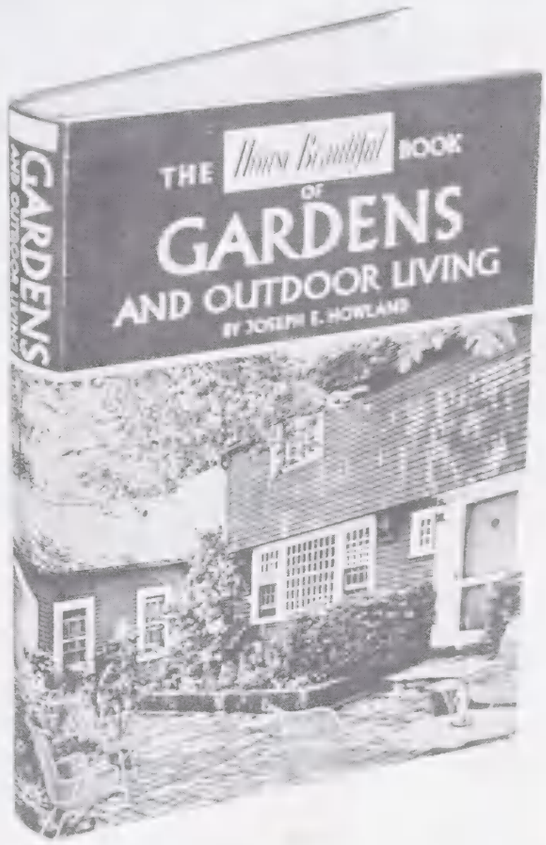
ANOTHER thing to do between black frost and crocus time is to destroy the garden remains of the year. Insects winter in the stalks of plants and in the general debris. Diseases lurk there, the spores of fungi, hibernating bacteria, and whatever form viruses take when they are not working. Never—as some advise—never use the cut stems of a perennial for a winter mulch. The only safe thing for the ordinary gardener to do is to gather all this waste and burn it or bury it a foot or more underground. Both insects and diseases may winter in the weeds near your garden, so also keep the weeds under some control.

The manufacturers of sprays and dusts are giving us more widely efficient chemicals every year; you can buy all-purpose mixtures which actually serve almost all purposes. Usually they contain a stomach poison for the chewing insects, a contact spray which kills those that suck for a living, perhaps rotenone or a pyrethrin (the old reliables), and a fungicide, such as Zineb, Captan, Ziram, Maneb, or fixed copper.

Fungi cause most diseases that the gardener encounters; moreover, the diseases caused by viruses and germs are generally incurable by today's chemistry. Some all-purpose bug killers have one disadvantage: They are sort of hard on people, though safe to use if you read the directions on the package and follow them. Read the directions! The finest print!

I notice that DDT is vanishing from the formulas on the fungicide packages, often replaced by the similar chemicals malathion or methoxychlor. Even these, however, should not be used on vegetables for at least seven days before they are picked.

The cautious guy will use the two old reliables as insecticides when he can—at least, have them on hand. They often serve. Both rotenone—which is a powdered extract of cube (pronounced cubay) and derris root, long used by South American Indians to stun fish—and Pyrethrum or the pyrethrins (which are powdered extracts of chrysanthemum blossoms) are harmless to us warm-blooded beasts of labor.



Be sure to cover the plant thoroughly and evenly with your insecticide, particularly on the underside of the leaves. The contact spray must actually hit the bug. And do me a favor; please read the label!

Many of our troubles with bugs we've brought upon ourselves. When the pioneers moved into the West, prairie chicken and quail thronged in the thickets and the grasslands. Farmers planted corn. In the autumn days hunters and farmers joyously hunted the birds, for they were good game, and presently both bird species were nearly extinct. Now the farmers learned what a plague of locusts was like, except that the insects were chinch bugs, little sucking insects, with a mighty appetite for corn juice.

Then the farmers found that the chinch bug had once been a large item in the diet of the prairie chicken and the quail, but it was too late, and for a while it actually appeared that America must in time abandon its corn fields. Then some research man discovered that chinch bugs could not cross a sufficient width of sod where red clover or alfalfa grew thick. A mold that grows in the damp sod infects chinch bugs with a deadly disease. So in some areas corn and clover became companion or rotation crops and the fields were saved.

YOU living where swarms of Japanese beetles are heavy, may take encouragement from the fact that the swarm generally passes away after a few years. The milky spore disease, which is deadly to Japanese beetles, has been scien-

Gardens for better living

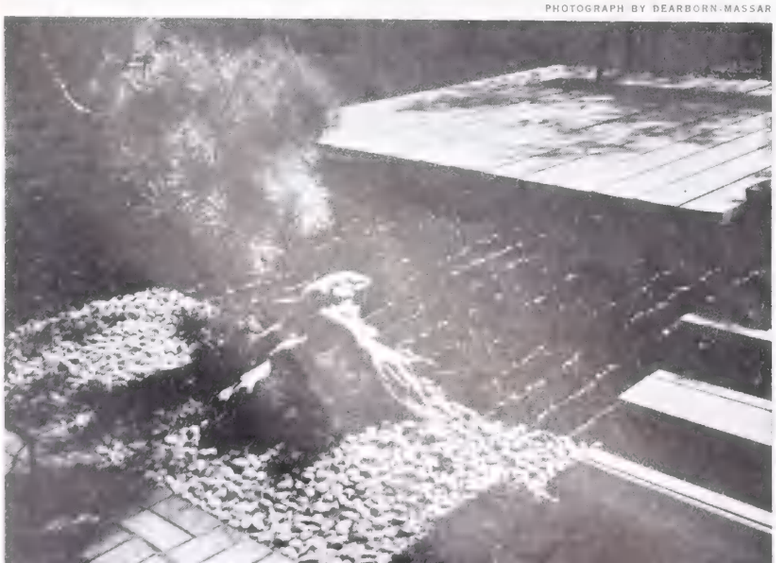
Put an extra-fine specimen front and center



If a plant is a joy to look at the year-around, the place to put it is where you can really see it during every season. These dramatic weeping hemlocks in a large stone planting bed are just outside the living room where they get the attention that they deserve. The Stewart Hopps home. Landscape architect, Sam Newsom.

How to have a better-looking winter-time garden

Use handsome unchanging materials

This entry garden will be as lovely in the dead of winter as it is in summer. Architects Terry and Moore used the interest of a well-shaped mugho pine to enliven the redwood, brick, gravel, and driftwood.

PHOTOGRAPH BY BEARBORN-MASSAR

● The odds are all in your favor when it comes to beautifying your garden in winter. It's easier to create a telling effect in the off-season than any other time of year. In the first place, there's usually an obvious need for improvements. And when you make improvements they count for more. Against the simplicity of the winter landscape a single dramatic accent will stand out like a fine jewel in a plain setting, while in spring and summer it will be just one of a sparkling handful.

In winter you have less area to cope with. You use only a small part of your garden this time of year, and it is easier to put the accents where they are sure to show to best advantage. If you add a touch of beauty to a drive, walk, or entryway, and create an eye-catching highlight outside a living room window, you have, for all practical purposes, enhanced your entire winter-time garden—and there is still time to start.

Create permanent architectural form

You need not worry about winter let-down in your garden if the architectural form of walks, planting beds and structure is interesting and strong, producing a play of shadows. For example, here at the William Esteys, the design of the permanent elements is a delight to look upon in every season of the year. The landscape architect was Karl Linn.

Choose dependable year-around plants

Some plants always have their best foot forward and are naturals to brighten the lackluster winter scene. Small evergreens like the dwarf spruce, juniper, and pine (below) are among the very best for permanence. Landscape architects, Innocenti and Webel.

Add plants with dramatic winter form

Sharpen your eye for the plants that assume exciting new character in winter; they can be the salvation of your off-season garden. The intriguing sinuous lines drawn on the wall below are the substance (and shadow) of wisteria when its leaves have gone. Other winter standouts: staghorn sumac, dogwood, Japanese maple, birch, and espaliered fruits.

From the minute these trees were planted the character of this entryway was completely changed. The shade added a splash of pattern and reduced the heat and glare of the paving. It pays to plant a really Big tree

You don't have to wait for years to enjoy the shade and big-scale beauty that only a mature tree can give

By RICHARD WEBEL, Landscape Architect

● A tree that is tall enough to walk under and wide enough to cast useful shade planted where you can constantly enjoy it is one of the best bargains your landscape dollars can buy. Here, in one beautiful package, you can get summer shade that disappears in winter when you seek the sun, structural design unmatched by any garden sculpture, ever-changing color, a continuous attraction to birds, and the one object you can put in a garden that's in scale with the size of a house.

From an aesthetic point of view, large trees make a house seem part of an established landscape. A tree compliments the architecture of the house when viewed from a distance and frames the garden when seen (Continued on next page) om inside looking out. Large ees give a mature and lived-in eling which flowers and shrubs n never do alone.

Most gardens are over-shrubbed d under-treed. Formerly we were le to build our houses near fine d trees. Now, with wholesale deruction of trees by ruthless bullzing, we constantly find house tes devoid of trees or other natul features. We must now bring ndscaping to the house. We must se landscape design to repair the amage we are doing to nature.

It takes about 15 years for a tree reach a size that's useful as an rnament on a terrace in a garden. nd, when necessary, large trees e well worth waiting for. Forunately, however, we are now able plant trees large enough to be proper scale with the house. uch trees should be selected and cated with as much care as you ould use in placing a fine piece of rniture in your living room. And ke good furniture, it can be enyed fully as soon as you put it use.

Of course, it is a joy to plant ung trees and watch them grow. nd in many locations beyond the undaries of daily outdoor life is is a most desirable thing to do. ut near the building where you eed the shade, and the form and ass in proportion to the architecre, nothing can take the place of large tree. Planted strategically ose to the house, a big deciduous ee is unsurpassed as an aid to r conditioning. It keeps the sun f the roof and walls on hot days nd lets light and warmth through winter when needed.

What it will cost

The cost will vary depending on ne distance the tree must be oved, and accessibility of the new cation. Bear in mind that at least 5 per cent of this cost is for the bor of moving the heavy weight f earth and wood. It costs no more move a beautiful healthy specien than a poor one. So, get the est tree you can.

Near New York City you should llow from $800 to $1,200 for a ee 30 feet tall with a 10-inch caliper (trunk diameter). If, at first lance, this seems like too much to pend for a tree, consider what ind of structure you could build your garden for the same price. nd how its contribution to your omfort and enjoyment would comare with that of a tree. Consider, o, that a tree calls for very little pkeep and its beauty increases as ne years go by.

Some trees cannot be moved when large. But, fortunately, there's a good selection that can. Among the best of the large shade trees for transplanting are red maple, sugar maple, Norway maple, plane tree, American beech, pin oak, honey locust (including some special named varieties) willow oak, sweet gum, and linden.

It's best to select the trees that fit the character of your garden and house. There's a tree for every situation. Some are formal, some picturesque, some give dense shade, some light open shadow, some have large textured foliage, while others are fine and delicate.

Tap-rooted trees such as white oak, walnut, and hickory cannot usually be moved safely. The easiest trees to move are those with a compact root system growing in an open exposed situation. Many of the conifers such as pine, spruce, and hemlock can be moved when quite large, but they are used most for screening or as single specimens. At one time the best and easiest tree to move was the American elm, but because of the Dutch elm disease this is now risky.

In some instances particularly with low one-story houses, or when planted in a garden, mature flowering trees are desirable. These never attain the height of the large shade trees listed above, but will provide pleasant contrast and interesting character. Among the smaller trees are apple, flowering crab, flowering cherry, dogwood, hawthorn, magnolia, and oxydendron or sourwood.

Many of the trees mentioned here will be available in your area, for their range is wide. In the southern states look especially for large specimens of oxydendron, evergreen magnolia, small and large-leafed figs, sea grape, grapefruit, and other citrus trees. In the west you might prefer the acacia, gingko, poplar, tulip tree, or birch.

Sometimes you'll find large trees in nurseries, but if they're not available in the size and variety you wish, they must be found elsewhere. Your nurseryman or tree specialist can best advise you about collecting trees that are hard to find. Landscape architects can also

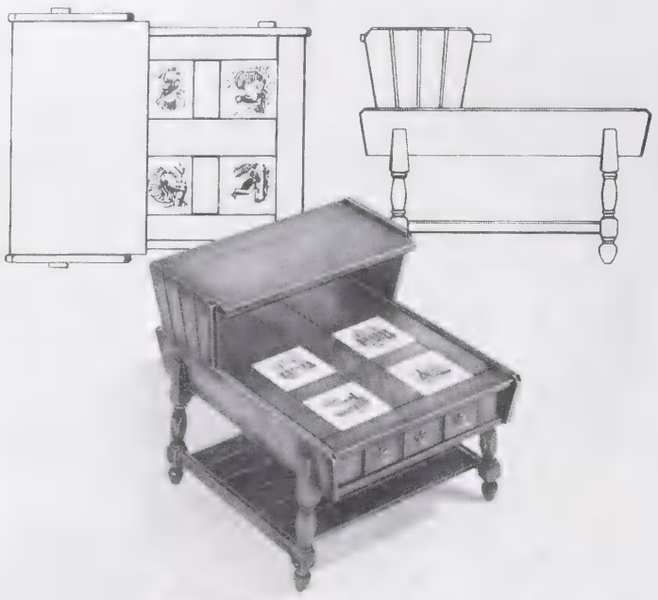
Happy memories and beautiful trees go together

keep them safe this Fall with DAVEY care

No better time than now to give your memory-rich trees the care they deserve.

Why Fall? Your outdoor entertaining is over for the most part and the garden is less used. Fall and Winter are ideal times for many kinds of tree care—and can be more economical, too, after the rush season.

Next Summer will bring a lovelier verdure to all your trees, if you feed them now, brace weak branches, prune for breathing space and beauty.



Davey tree service for clearing your wood lot can be more economical during Winter. Thoroughly schooled crews of experts, backed with extensive research, will, with the most modern equipment, give true professional care for your trees. Let satisfaction be a happy memory you add to your garden this Fall.

IT PAYS TO PLANT A REALLY BIG TREE

help you find sources for trees and help you put the trees where you'll get the most value from them.

It is wise to select a variety that has grown well in your region. You can then be sure it will flourish in the local climate; assuming soil and drainage are satisfactory.

Soil should be balanced

In general, trees should be planted in a "balanced" soil that includes enough humus to hold water for the roots to absorb; and enough sand or gravel to let excess water drain through so the roots will not get waterlogged and rot.

When you've decided on the tree you want and the hole is dug large enough to hold the roots without crowding, fill the hole with water to test the drainage. If the water disappears in a few hours, soil should be removed and peat moss or other good humus added. If the water stands more than a day, the subsoil will have to be broken up and porous material put in so water will drain away, or drain tile may have to be installed. If there are trees growing nearby, it's likely your soil will be all right. But, in all cases, drainage should be checked. Sometimes native trees grow where transplanted trees would fail for lack of drainage.

How it is done

It is easier today to move large trees than ever before, and more nurseries and tree-moving specialists are equipped to do it. More compact machinery, new anti-transpiration materials (to help hold life-giving moisture in the tree), development of improved techniques, and increased demand for large trees all help to make it easier and faster.

Don't buy a large tree from any but an experienced local firm with an established reputation. There's always a chance of expensive and disappointing failure in moving big trees, so it doesn't pay to hunt for cut-rate service. Some tree-movers guarantee replacement if the tree should die within a year. Some guarantee them for two years. In some cases you are on your own. Although trees can be moved any time the ground can be dug, the favored time is spring or fall, and fall is usually considered best.

Trees that grow in good garden soil will have their root-ball wrapped in burlap before moving. If soil is too sandy to make a firm ball, the root area may have to be boxed to hold soil.

If the tree is to be taken from the wild, some movers think it best to plan a year in advance. The roots are pruned at the perimeter of the earth-ball to increase the number of fibrous feeder-roots. These new roots then supply extra food and water to the tree to help compensate for the shock of moving. Some movers think root pruning is about as much of a shock as moving and prefer to do it all in one operation. This way, the tree is where it can easily be cared for while recovering from the shock. The point is, be prepared for some delay if your mover uses the two-stage method. In either case the tops will be cut back to be in balance with the reduced root system. Nursery-grown trees are kept in balance and with root-balls ready for moving at any time.

The growth of the tree will be retarded and foliage will be smaller the first season after planting but this set-back is only temporary. The movers will stake the tree properly and give you instructions for feeding and watering. These should be taken seriously. The first year is the most critical time in the life of a newly-planted tree.

But caring for your new trees will be a labor of love. When you see the magnificent spread of branches and begin to enjoy all it has to offer you are sure to give it all the care it needs to keep it doing well.

tifically spread in some areas and may be chiefly responsible for their disappearance, but I make the guess that birds did much.

Household insecticides with DDT are a mixed blessing. They have a long residual effect as a nerve poison, killing most species of insects that walk on a sprayed surface weeks, sometimes months, after the spraying. It is a marvel of science, no doubt, but in a way, much too efficient. In fact, it has been blamed for some of the actual increase in insect pests, for it kills the bugs' enemies as well.

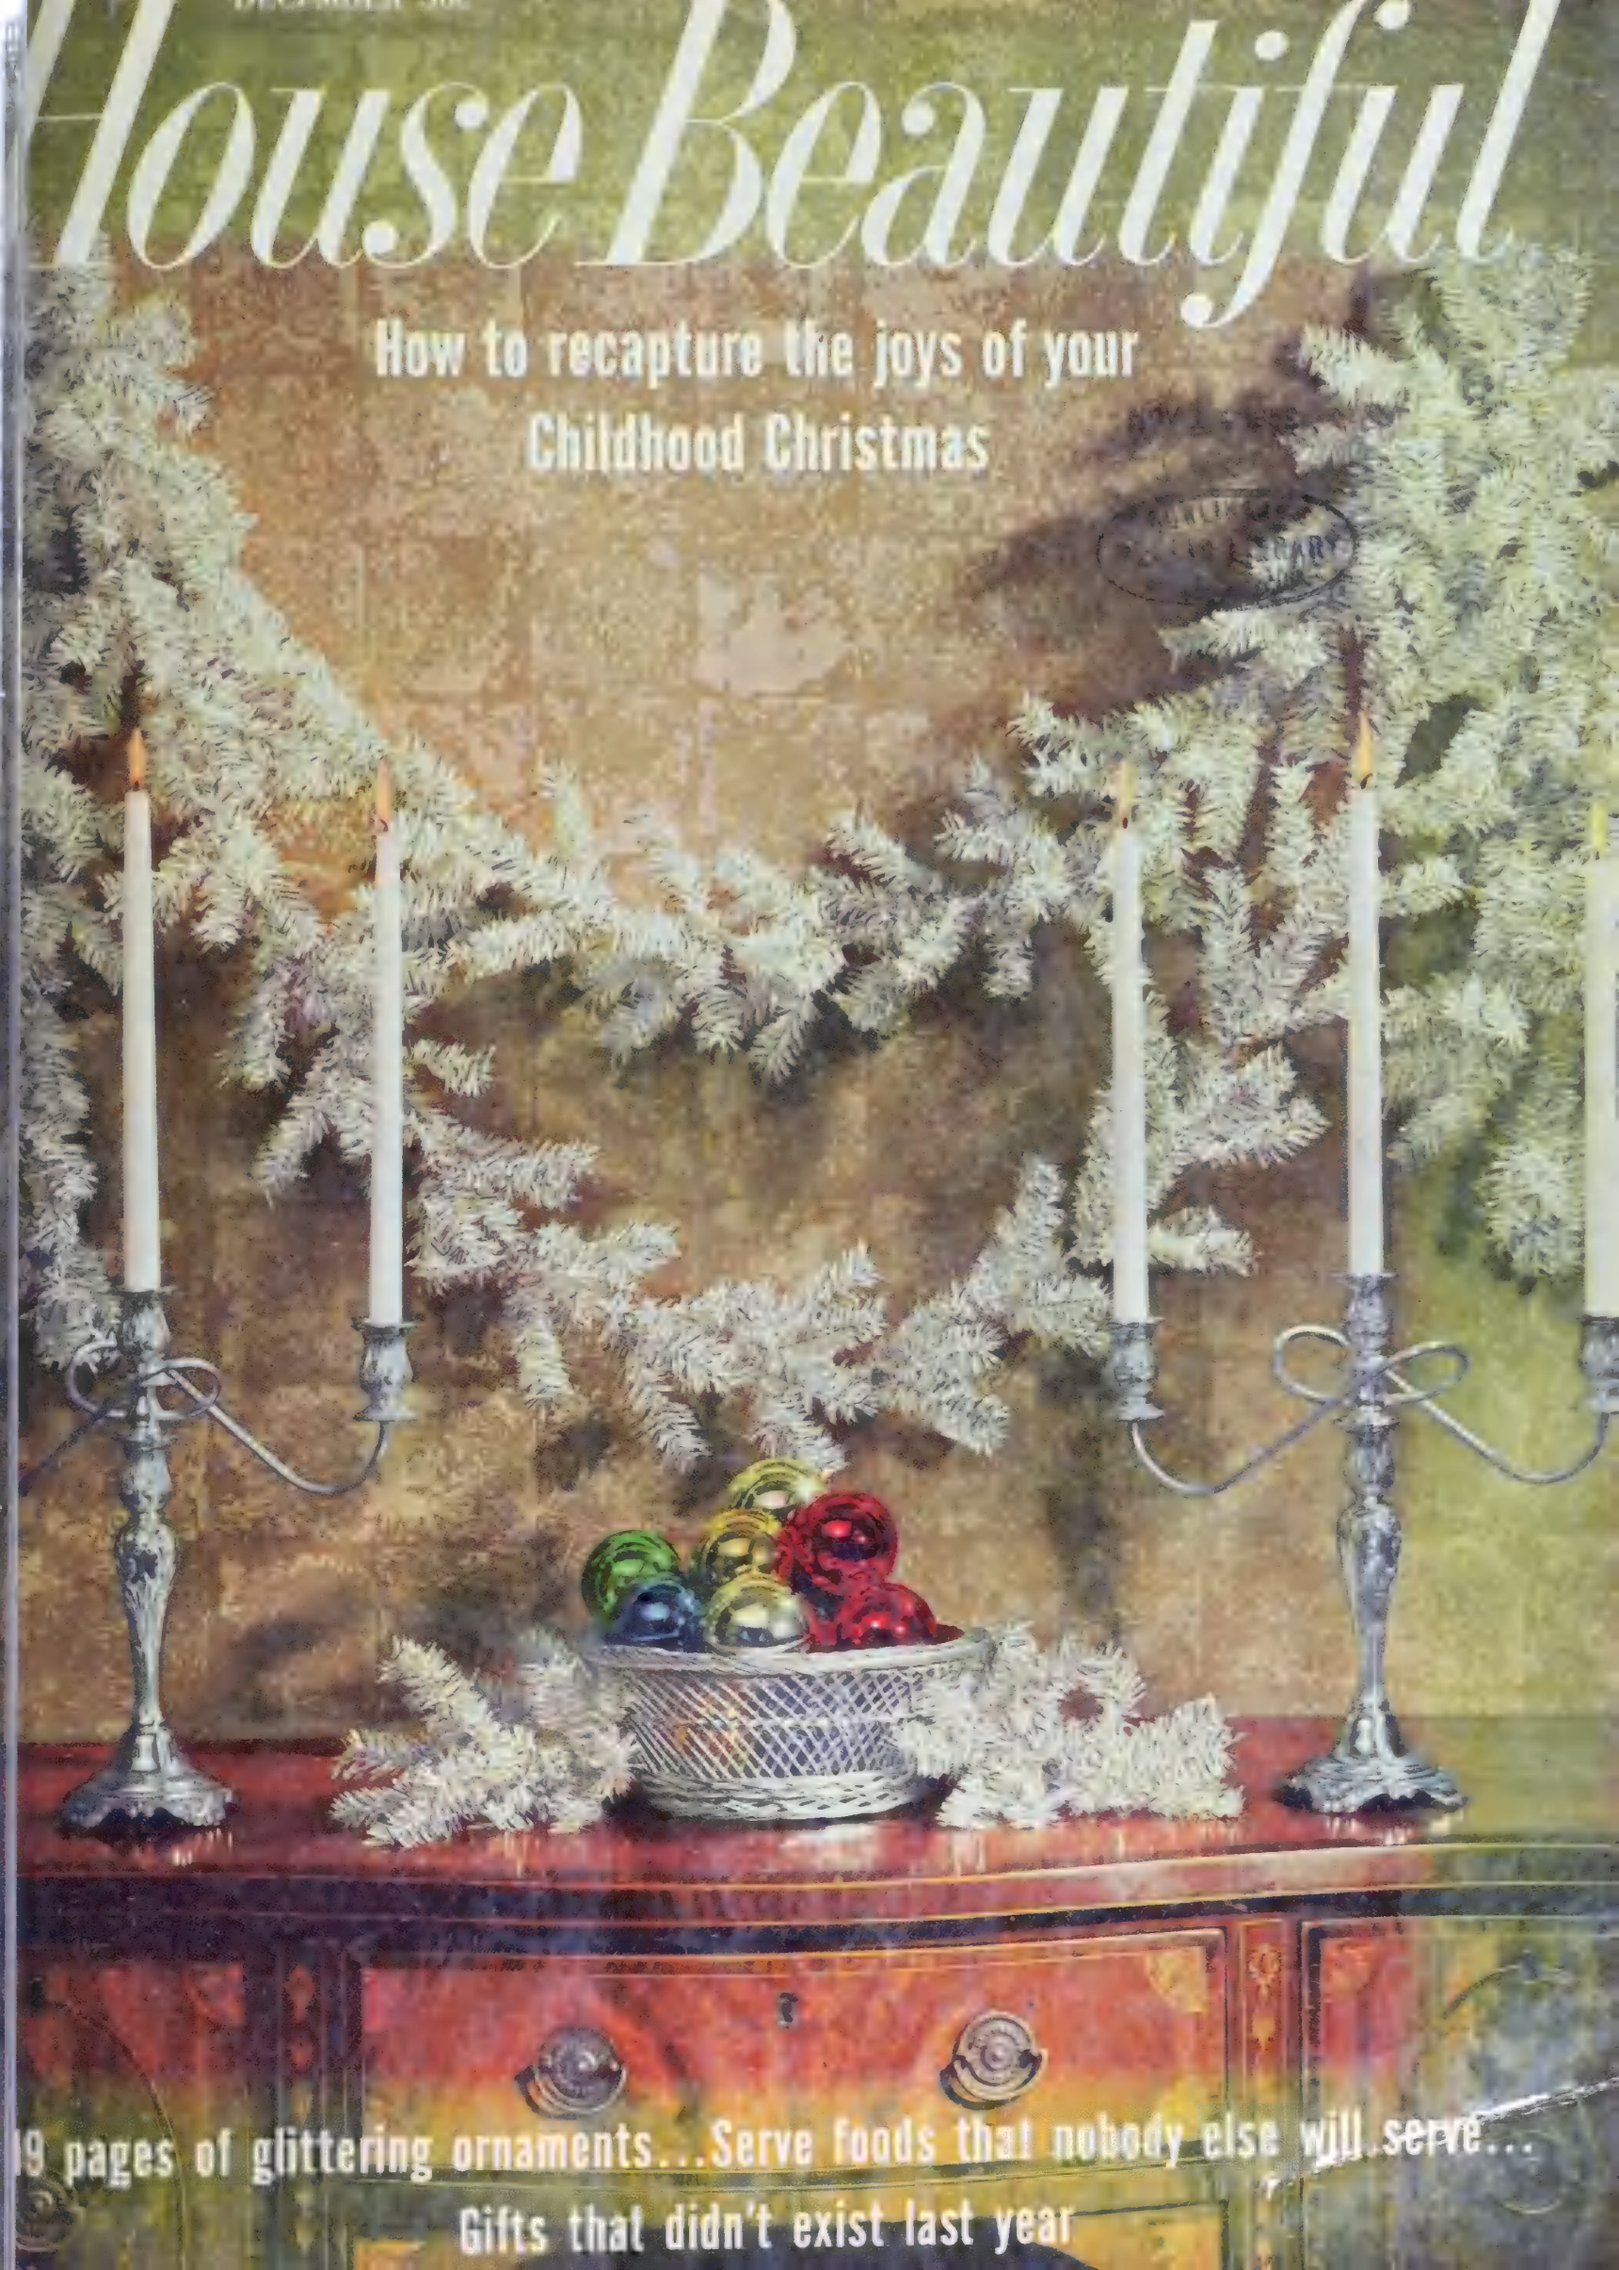
BUT DDT doesn't control all small life—it does not harm mites at all. It has borne the blame, rightly, I think, for a vast increase in the general infestation of a most destructive speck of life, scarcely visible, the red spider, which is not often red, nor a spider, nor even an insect, but a mite.

The nerve poison killed the predators and parasites that feed on mites, the mites worked with their customary zeal at propagation, and science had to develop a good miticide in a hurry. Some insects have developed immunity to DDT, as they have to even deadlier bug killers.

The lady bug (a true beetle), is a lion of the insect world and the gardener's good friend. There are several insects that prey on other crawling things: the fantastic praying mantis, the rather large black or brown ground beetles that scurry among the garden debris, the aphid lion which is the larva of the lacewinged fly, the ichneumon fly or wasp, and other wasps.

I do not know whether lady beetles devour ants or not. I do know that the lady beetle and its grub will eat an incredible number of aphids between dawn and dark.

I am as reluctant a sprayer as I am a duster and never take action until the threat is clear. Consider, for illustration, the Mexican bean beetle in my garden in 1959. In the past I have found this abomination, which looks like a large bronze lady bug, and its yellow larva, the most troublesome insect in my garden, without exception. The reluctant sprayer must keep a frequent watch on the garden, of course, and in my daily investigations I found the lace that the Mexican tribe, both beetle and grub, make of bean leaves on the Fordhook bush limas here and there. But there were neither beetles nor larva to be seen. The bug is not much o a gypsy, so I knew that some pred ator, to my surprise, had developed a taste for the Mexican bean bee tle. It may have been a grackle ground beetles, or the praying man tis I saw nearby, but I surely did not wish my benefactor any dis couragement, so I did not spra there. However, high on the pol beans at the other end of the gar den, I observed both the lace and the lace makers, so I gave the lat ter a cloud of dust right where they live.



I have no doubt that some spray ing or dusting or both are neces sary in nearly all gardens, and I seldom walk out to my vegetable patch without a duster in hand.

If our farmers halted their sched uled dusting and spraying, we would quickly have a famine o truly Oriental severity—or worse We cannot grow some crops at all without spraying on a strict sched ule. Apples, for example, require a dozen or more treatments every sea son if the fruit is to mature in marketable perfection, or indeed sound enough to keep. In fact, the medical care of most tree fruits, notably peaches, plums, cherries, and pears, is a fine craft, far be yond the skill and pocketbook of the back-yard gardener who has a half-dozen trees scattered around the yard. Codling moths, scales, mites, leaf rollers, curculios, mag gots, railroad worms, rots, and blights breeze in and the spray schedule must be timed exactly to the day and the weather. Unless you are willing to give up golf, spend the money for materials and apparatus and become a professional orchardist, you had better treat your fruit trees as ornamentals and take what fruit the swarms leave as a windfall of fortune.

THE garden future, as I've re marked, looks like a red, red rose. Every day science learns more about soils and growth. Who knows what experiments like that done with selenium will bring?

Each year the experimental sta tions approve new varieties of plants that resist disease (and not the least of the damage that insects do is spread disease). And perhaps soon the scientists will be able to do something they have never yet accomplished: Of the 800,000 kinds of insects known on this earth sci ence has never yet exterminated a single species.

For those who value good music and fine furniture . . .

There's a New Kind of Stereo High-Fidelity Console

For many years, people who cared about good music and fine furniture searched for a way to enclose high-fidelity equipment in a cabinet that was equal to the quality of their best furniture.

Until now, they had to compromise. They had to sacrifice the best possible music reproduction if they wanted a good looking cabinet. If they would not compromise on sound quality, they had to choose high-fidelity components—or more recently, stereo high-fidelity components—which may not have been quite so appealing to the eye.

If you are one of those people, and dislike compromise, you will be interested in this new kind of stereo high-fidelity console.

Stromberg-Carlson has created a new kind of console that reproduces music as faithfully as high quality separately mounted components.

We have christened this new kind of console with a long name: STROMBERG-CARLSON INTEGRITY SERIES COMPONENT ENSEMBLES. To uncompromising people who want high-fidelity performance each word in that name is significant.

First, all of the 16 styles are designed by Federico and rendered by cabinet craftsmen. Have you ever tried to describe your favorite painting? If so, you can understand why we prefer you see the styles rather than read about them.

Second, listen to the Integrity Series. Here is where this new kind of console really demonstrates its uniqueness. The music you hear will be clear and precise—like no other reproduction you have ever heard unless you own—or have listened to—a high quality stereo high-fidelity component system.

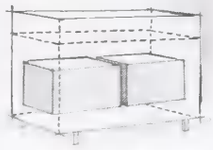
If you are a person who values good music and good furniture, no one will have to "sell" you an Integrity Series Ensemble after you see and hear it. (And if you aren't, no one will try—there is no point in "selling" something that people "buy.")

Why Integrity Series Ensembles differ from any other console.

There is no secret ingredient or magic potion. Integrity Series Ensembles employ high quality components, of course. But we and other manufacturers have tried that in consoles before without success. The problem that has faced every manufacturer is universal. Until now, when speakers capable of reproducing the full range of sound were rigidly mounted in the same console as high quality high-fidelity stereo components, there was a serious loss of sound quality.

This loss—most often recognized as muddy or boomy noises—is caused by what is called "feedback." It occurs because sensitive high quality stereo components can detect the speaker vibrations which are fed back through the body of the cabinet. These vibrations are amplified with the music and reproduced as noise you hear.

If you own a console now, but do not hear these noises, it is not because your ears are insensitive.



You do not hear them because we and every other console manufacturer had to eliminate them by compromising the musical reproduction of your console. You do not hear them because the sound you hear is not complete.

Integrity Series Ensembles are different from ordinary consoles because they give you complete sound without muddy or boomy noises.

How Stromberg-Carlson Eliminated Feedback Noises in Integrity Series Ensembles

It was a painstaking process, but now we can explain it quickly:

The Integrity Series Ensemble is the first successful uncompromised console because we have developed a way to control feedback. The key development is what we call ISO-COUSTIC SPEAKER SYSTEM MOUNTING. (We put it in capital letters because—we must confess—we are rather proud of this radical new achievement.) The ISO-COUSTIC Mounting creates a cabinet-within-cabinet suspension system which prevents transmission of speaker vibrations to the sensitive components. If you component owners could put your equipment into a cabinet whose speaker systems have our ISO-COUSTIC Mounting, the quality of the sound you'd hear would be as good as it is now. In fact, the components we use are the same ones you would choose for your separately mounted component system.

Why others have failed.

Other attempts have been made to solve the feedback problem. They have failed because they have tried to correct the problem in a console without isolating it. We believe that the reason we succeeded was because we knew we had to develop a new kind of console—and because we were fortunate.

Integrity Series Ensembles required two speaker systems of unquestionable quality. We were fortunate because we had already developed a system that met the quality requirements, the well-regarded Acoustical Labyrinth® Speaker System.

It would take at least another column to tell how we were able to reduce this popular system to a size that would allow two of them to fit into a reasonable-size stereo ensemble.

We did it.

The most convincing proof of this is that Integrity Series Ensembles use the same components you would use in a separately mounted system. They are interchangeable.

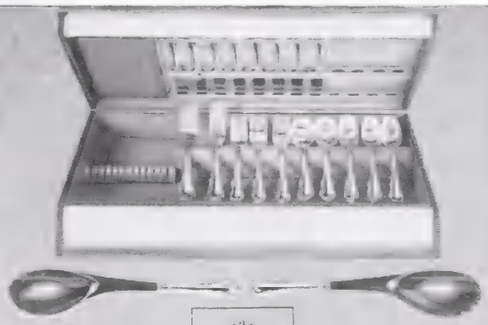
Won't become obsolete.

Since the components within Integrity Series cabinetry are interchangeable, any future development in stereo or high fidelity can be incorporated simply by replacing existing components. You never have to replace your fine cabinet.

If you know a lot about stereo high fidelity, there is nothing more we can tell you. You're on your own.

If you know little about stereo high-fidelity equipment . . . but you love to listen to the most realistic music reproduction you can possibly hear . . . you may want the advice of someone whose judgement in music you respect. Ask him to join you in listening to this new kind of high-fidelity console at one of the better department, music or component stores. Listen closely. Ask questions. Then, accept not our judgement, but your own, and his.

INTEGRITY SERIES COMPONENT ENSEMBLES —three hundred and fifty dollars to about six thousand dollars. You may choose from 16 models in traditional, contemporary and period stylings, each tastefully designed by Federico. You may select your own components, or choose a recommended component complement—in any case components are always interchangeable.



For a complete color catalog of Integrity Series Component Ensembles and components write Stromberg-Carlson, Special Products Division, 1424 N. Goodman Street, Rochester 3, New York.

Traditions are for all year round

By MARIAN CARTER LEWI

Not just at Christmas but every day, the little rituals of family life keep the group together

• We all expect traditions at Christmastime. Some families trim the tree early, some late; some lure Santa Claus with stockings hung by the chimney with care, others prefer the bedpost approach. Whatever the way, there is something joyous and reassuring about the sameness of these family traditions.

Since they are such fun, why limit them to only one time of year? There are 364 other days just waiting to be highlighted by some special event. Don't stop with Christmas—start with Christmas. Building traditions is an especially rewarding way to have family fun, and at the same time strengthen family unity by laying up a store of happy shared memories.

There is nothing mysterious about a family tradition. Webster defines it as "a custom which has its roots in one family." Every family is fertile ground for this kind of root to grow, and you can start planting a seed any time, for no special season is required. Just repeat a favorite activity often enough for it to feel it belongs, and it will soon put down its roots. It is as simple as that. No talent or even imagination is needed. Your children will tell you what they like to do, and they love to do the same things over and over again. "Let's do it again just like we did last time," is a refrain familiar to any mother. It is like finding a signpost in a world of unfamiliar wonders, and a signpost shared by the whole family gives more definite directions.

WHAT will your child remember when he is grown? It will not be the shiny kitchen floor, or the nicely ironed shirts; but it will be the gingerbread cookies you always made with him and his friends on rainy Saturday afternoons, or the Popsicles that crowded the ice trays all summer long. It is not hard to find traditions; you probably have some in your family already, but just have not repeated them enough to make them reall take root.

With five children we are culti vating quite a sizable crop of cus toms. Of course, every family like picnics, so we picnic, not indis criminately, but with a plan. Ever Saturday noon, each of the three older children asks a friend fo lunch in turn. This becomes quite an event, for the hostess of the day picks the menu as well as the guest. She also helps as much a she can with the preparation Sometimes the weather drives u in to a full-fledged luncheon in the dining room, or hot dogs over the living room fireplace with a sheet to discourage imaginary ants and incidentally to protect the rug from accidents.

I SHOP for food only once a week, and when I come driving home, the car contains enough provisions for a small-sized army, which is true! So we've established a K. P. tradition at our house. The four older children unhook their shopping bags from the cellar door and load up. It takes about twenty minutes with all hands working to transfer the goods from "car to kitch." When all is stowed in the proper places, I pass around lollypops or break out a new box of cookies I had picked out at the store for this particular purpose. A cooky or two does not take away the appetite and does wonders for the morale. Like as not we have an extra worker in one of their friends, and competition usually develops to see who can carry the biggest load without accident. The best helper gets an extra lollypop.

Sunday afternoon in winter is a time we like best. We all gather together for tea before the fire; this is a family time, no friends are allowed. The little ones use the coffee table and their own small tea set, while the nine-year-old twins feel they have graduated to the discomfort of balancing their saucers on their laps. Often we combine a light supper with tea and have the food situation all taken care of at once. But the most fun is the entertainment. Each of us, including Dad and me, have to offer something for the enjoyment of the others. It can be a song, a story, a poem, a riddle. This is in no way meant to foster exhibitionism, but to give an opportunity to share a beloved poem or a favorite song. We have one rule. No poem or story can keep recurring, even with new embellishments. If someone has gone through his repertoire, then something new must be learned during the week at home or at school. The children have a great advantage, for they are learning new things all the time. So it has sent me back to my college Browning with renewed enjoyment.

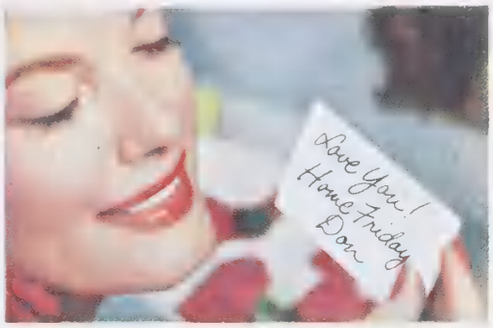
At one session, Dad, having tapped all resources, dipped into his military school training and came up with the Queen's Manual at Arms, using the poker for a rifle. When we all fell in behind for the final parade with umbrellas and firetongs, no general ever led a more devoted, charmed regiment.

When the children were smaller and their days consisted of the limited routine of the very young, I used to take one child at a time away from the others for a special afternoon of her very own. Together we would do something she particularly enjoyed. This is very different from having a child along on a necessary shopping tour. She chose what we were to do. It might be a visit to the duck pond, a trip to the pet shop or, in winter, skating. It was thrilling to see how one child blossomed when the attention was solely on her. The lack of competition, together with undivided interest, gave her a very real sense of belonging. It was like a precious secret she carried, this knowledge that we loved her for her own particular little self. I say she, because all five of our children are girls. Later, back in the hurly burly of the group again, she kept this knowledge like a talisman against the ordinary discouragements in everyday living.

Now that the girls are a little older, the afternoons when school is over are crowded with activities. Yet we still have our special afternoon together. A sitter comes to look after the others, while one child goes off with me. The choices are different now. We drop in at the library, ride bikes, go to the museum. Back home again, instead of having supper with the others, she eats her evening meal with her father and me. Manners come easily this way, for she wants to please us and, not competing with the others for a little space to air her ideas, she has an easy, pleasant conversation with us on her own level. After supper we three do something together following one of her special interests. We work with the stamp album, sew together while Dad reads aloud to us, or play dolls. It has been a wonderful way to keep on knowing the children as their interests and activities carry them quite naturally more and more away from home.

There are so many family activities that can blossom into traditions with just a little more encouragement and repetition. I mention only ours because they are the ones we know best. Certainly you remember something you did when you were little, something that stands out in your mind as being very special. Haven't you longed to do it again? You can do it now with your children—hunt May flowers in the spring, write funny jingles to go with birthday presents, have a picnic supper in the woods on Midsummer's Eve.



Start now with the feeling of Christmas upon you. Perhaps you can make something together for Christmas dinner such as place cards for everyone, with simple line drawings about some special event in each member's life and let each one guess what it represents.

Certainly Christmas with its special activities comes but once a year, but the feeling of family and the air of festivity can go on throughout the year and be part of your special family flavor. Some day your children will pay you the greatest dividends on your investment of time and thought when they say, "Don't we have fun together—I'll always remember! And when I get big I'll have fun with my family, too."

FRANCISCAN, THE BEAUTIFUL BEST IN DINNERWARE . . . CREATED BY GLADDING, McBEAN & CO., LOS ANGELES

"to cherish...?"

mused the artist, in replying to a child..."to cherish is to possess...with love... yet more"...and then she smiled.
"let me show you, cara mia, in the language I know best."

(and this painting is her answer to her daughter's small request.)

"you cherish things of beauty... the first violet of spring,
a kitten small, a baby doll,
your birthstone in a ring.
I cherish you more than all the world for your beauty fills my heart
...and, in a material way,
I cherish
all that I own of art."
the little one watched pensively as the painting grew...beguiled
...and then, she touched it tenderly,
"I cherish," said the child.

(L'envoi: our aim in creating fine dinnerware is, not only to meet your request, but to guide your child in her everyday world to cherish the "beautiful best.")

AN EXPERT SELECTS

A Music Library for less than $15

This collection of reference books makes a wonderful gift for any music lover —including yourself

By MARTIN BOOKSPAN

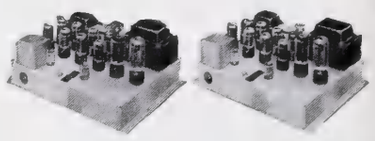
Director of recorded music, Station WQXR, New York

• It was a pleasant surprise to discover recently how many good inexpensive paperback books there are on the subject of music. The beauty of this is that we can now buy ten or twelve books for about the price we used to pay for two or three, and we can more often afford the luxury of surrounding ourselves with books on a favorite subject and viewing it through the eyes of many experts.

I've had occasion to read most of the paperbound music books in print and was delighted to find that a selection of as few as a dozen, at a total price of less than $15, would make a solid cornerstone for a basic reference library on the subject. These books were chosen for their range of interest, easy use, and sensible organization of the material.

With these books on the shelf, you will have at hand the answers to nearly any question you may have about music. And, should you find time to read them all through, you will learn a great deal indeed about this fascinating art and its creators.

The first two books will give you a broad panorama of musical history and the men who have played the major parts.



A Popular History of Music, Harman (Dell, 50 cents, 352 pages).

Carter Harman, the author of this excellent one-volume music history, is a former music critic of the New York Times and music editor of Time. He has put together an engrossing volume that covers

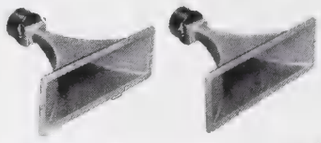
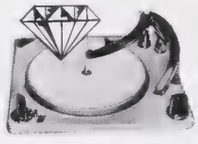
The inside story of the Magnavox CONCERT GRAND

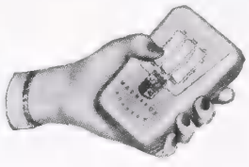


. . . one glance at the heavy acoustical cabinetry and the precision Magnavox components will convince you that the Concert Grand has no counterpart, anywhere! It incorporates the finest, most powerful sound system ever developed for home use.



100-WATTS UNDISTORTED AUDIO POWER—(200-watts peak) from four amplifiers—a separate treble and bass amplifier for each channel—no intermodulation distortion.

TWO SUPER-POWER 15" BASS SPEAKERS—(one for each stereo channel) in enclosed infinite baffle. 85 oz. total magnet weight. Bass speakers (and horns described below), provide more than ten times the speaker efficiency of conventional instruments!

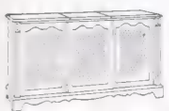


TWO 1,000 cycle EXPONENTIAL TREBLE HORNS—(one for each stereo channel) project mid-range and treble tones bi-angularly for maximum stereophonic separation; provide purest tonal reproduction.

EXCLUSIVE MAGNAVOX PRECISION CHANGER—STEREO DIAMOND PICK-UP—handles records of all types more carefully than human hands, actually cleans them while playing. Precise, silent—even while changing. Automatically "remembers" to shut off entire instrument after last record.

FM/AM TUNER—EXCLUSIVE MAGNAVOX SOUND EQUALIZER CONTROLS—Treble volume control raises or lowers treble volume without distorting timbre. Step-by-step bass control provides for controlling bass volume and timbre without losing bass fundamentals.

REVOLUTIONARY REMOTE WIRELESS CONTROL—this ingenious Magnavox innovation lets you turn instrument on/off, control volume, reject records and even gives you touch-of-a-finger control of the signal-seeking FM/AM radio . . . all from anywhere in your home!



THE MAGNAVOX COMPANY, FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

The Concert Grand—in several beautiful styles and fine woods—From one thousand dollars

Announcing the magnificent Magnavox Concert Grand

...unquestionably the finest, most revolutionary stereophonic high fidelity instrument ever created!

Words alone cannot convey the breath-taking performance of this fabulous electronic achievement by Magnavox—world leader in stereophonic high fidelity. You must hear it to believe it. Nothing like the Concert Grand has ever been created before! Now music truly becomes magic —imagine yourself surrounded in your own home by living performances of the world's great orchestras and artists . . . magnificently re-created with all of the grandeur and spectacular dimensional realism of the original performance.

The Concert Grand also offers you all the superlative features that electro-acoustical science is capable of creating: It has tremendous power (100 watts undistorted, 200 watts peak), switches and connections to permit the operation of stereo extension speakers throughout your home. A revolutionary wireless remote control permits complete operation from anywhere in the house. It turns the instrument on and off, controls volume, rejects records and changes stations at the touch of a button, automatically selecting every usable FM or AM signal on the air. Think of the convenience of being in your upstairs bedroom and with the world of music at your command!

To see and to hear the Concert Grand is to know that the ultimate degree of Magnavox craftsmanship has been lavished upon it . . . hand-crafted fine furniture as well as perfection in sound reproduction! Read more about it in the column at left, then visit your factory-direct Magnavox dealer for a spectacular demonstration. He's listed in the Yellow Pages.

For an ideal kitchen—begin with a perfect plan . . .
and Permanent, Beautiful Ceramic Tile

1960

CERAMIC TILE IDEA KITCHEN

created by HERMAN YORK, A.I.A.

the permanent beauty of CERAMIC TILE...

inspired Herman York, A.I.A., to create this beautiful, worka 1960 Idea Kitchen.

Ceramic Tile has the talent for adding a special look to e kitchen . . . its marvelous style and timeless beauty need notl to enhance it!

The brilliance of a tile wall needs no added decoration—or costly redecorating.

Easy care tile floors gleam without waxing—never any expen cement costs.

ctive tile countertops and drainboards need no pampering
y protection from marring.
mic Tile is as elegant as any heart could wish for—yet it's st indestructible! Water and dampness won't warp it; fire, e and grease won't harm it; rough wear won't mark it;
ehold stains won't discolor it; cutting can't scratch it; its
-in colors never fade! Ceramic Tile lets you live with ease.

The attractive patterns and gay colors of Ceramic Tile will inspire you to create your own dream kitchen. Whether you are building or remodeling, ceramic tile will fit into your plans . . . add to your convenience and enhance the value of your home.

Ask your ceramic tile contractor (he's listed in your classified telephone directory) to show you how tile can provide permanent beauty and long range economy for you. And be sure to ask him about the new lower cost tile installation methods.

▲ A perfect leisure center—thanks to Herman York's choice of clean, sensible, ageless Ceramic Tile.

And the beauty of tile is that it teams up with any contrasting material or decorating scheme—traditional or modern.

◀ No more cleaning drudgery. With easy to clean, care-free Ceramic Tile you can let the family tramp happily in and out of the "mud" room.

Ceramic Tile multiplies the usefulness of any area—adds personality and imagination to every part of your home . . . keeps new looking for the life of your home. It's a sensible long-term investment for every home-maker, since there's never any expensive replacement costs.

If you're building a new home, or remodeling, be sure to see your local tile contractor for complete information on new low-cost installations.

IT PLAYS "AVE MARIA" by Gounod when you pull the knob that winds the music box concealed inside this wall plaque. But even when silent, it's as pretty as a picture because a golden medallion of the Madonna and Child is framed in the ivory leather front. A meaningful gift for anyone devoted to the Blessed Mother, 5½" sq., $10. Bard's, Dept. 1112, Evanston, Ill.

NOW IT CAN BE GOLD. If your husband was one of the first to sport a madras dinner jacket or paisley slacks, here is the very latest thing to turn the country club into a hubbub. It's a clip-on bow tie of 24k gold cloth lined with silk jersey to wear with his evening clothes! $5. You can order one, too, with pin back for blouses, $5. Scintilla, HB12, 1209 W. Balmoral, Chicago 40.

THAT CERTAIN SEALING is a sterling-silver elegance that you can be proud to give, and yet its price wouldn't make a piggy bank bat an eyelash. Give one to a woman whose desk is as serene as her garden, another to the nurse in your doctor's office. Envelope sealer is the smart, easy way to moisten envelopes. $2.75. Edith Chapman, Nyack, N.Y.

ELECTRIC SHOE SHINER. Wow! What man wouldn't dote on this! Just plug it into any 110-volt AC outlet and you get a professional shine in jig-time. It automatically switches off when too much pressure is applied, so you needn't worry about leather "burn." $29.95 plus 50¢ post. Extra buffer, $3. Order from Camalier & Buckley, 1141 Connecticut Ave., Washington 6, D.C.

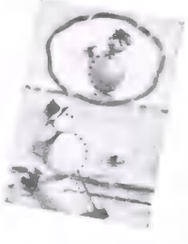
WITH THE MAGIC OF CALIFORNIA IN EVERY TEMPTING MORSEL

...so easy to give...so sure to be welcome



HEAVENLY FRUIT CAKE! No other like it in all the world. It took 7 years to perfect the recipe. No small pieces of dried fruits in this magical concoction...but whole fruits...magical Mission Pak glacéd fruits! 90% fruits and nuts, only 10% batter. Great big tender cherries, huge chunks of moist pineapple, crisp, crunchy pecans and walnuts, and luscious, seedless white figs. Wonderful for Christmas gifts...great to have on hand all through the year for unexpected guests. We dare you to try one and be able to resist the urge to order more. Never sold in stores...just direct to you. Only a limited number available, so order today to be sure of getting this wonderful gift.

3 BIG GIFT SIZES: Gift No. 11, 1½ lbs., $3.75. Gift No. 12, 2 lbs., $4.65. Gift No. 14, 3 lbs., $5.95.

GLACÉD CALIFORNIA FRUITS. It takes a full year to prepare these rare fruit delicacies. You can't buy glacéd fruits like these in stores. Repeated slow simmerings replace all water content with orange blossom honey and nectar syrups. Just the mist of honey sweetness surrounds each piece to blend with the natural flavors of freshly picked fruits...thick slices of pineapple and whole apricots, cherries, miniature pears, dates and seedless white figs. A tasty, low-calory substitute for candy...so inexpensive you can add extra people to your gift list.

Gift No. 1, 1 lb., $2.49. Gift No. 2, 2 lbs., $4.97.
Gift No. 3, 3 lbs., $6.89.

ANOTHER WAY
RCA SERVES YOU THROUGH ELECTRONICS

The second most prized possession of Rodgers and Hammerstein

You probably know all about them. You certainly don't need a long introduction to Richard Rodgers and Oscar Hammerstein II, the men who created a whole new musical theater.

A simple flower drum, symbolic of "Flower Drum Song," is their most prized possession. R&H's second most prized possession is today's RCA Victor Color TV.

For they have worked in color television. They believe in it, and know how exciting it is. The Rodgers and Hammerstein television production of "Cinderella" received rave reviews. Critic after critic singled out the colors of sets and costumes for special praise. R&H know that on television or on the stage, color is a vital force in setting a mood—heightening the action—actually giving the audience more enjoyment.

Whether your taste runs to musicals or westerns, sports or comedy, RCA Victor "Living Color" TV is the way to watch any show. The color picture is brilliant, the black-and-white picture of finest quality, too. And the sound system is so advanced it can serve as the second speaker unit for your Stereo High Fidelity setup. See RCA Victor Color TV at your dealer's. Prices as low as $495.

you'll sleep better if you know it's got this tag

A blanket with this tag takes a load off your mind. It washes and dries by machine—yet it stays fluffy, tucks deep, ends shrinkage problems (it's the only blanket of its kind to win the American Institute of Laundering Seal!). A blanket with this tag takes a load off your shoulders. It feels remarkably light, yet laboratory tests prove it's warmer, ounce for ounce, than ordinary blankets. It's moth- and mildew-resistant, non-allergenic, dry cleans beautifully, too. And to make it clear what you're getting, it's tagged Winterweight, Mediumweight, or Lightweight. In solid colors, prints, novelty weaves. You'll sleep better (so will your family) if your blankets are 100% virgin Acrilan.* You're sure when you see this tag.

JORDAN'S GENUINE VIRGINIA HAM

SMOKED 30 DAYS

THEN AGED LIKE VINTAGE WINE

NEARLY 300 years ago, Virginia colonists sent to England hams of a distinctive savory flavor that soon were acclaimed by gourmet and royalty throughout the capitals of Europe. Both the fame and famous flavor have endured. Today, as then, the true Virginia ham is one of the world's delicacies.

Each magnificent ham now hanging in our aging rooms, slowly cured, smoked to a rich mahogany hue, aged approx. one year, has been tended by hand through each unhurried step—as we have done for the past 119 years. These carefully selected hams are put down in dry salt in cool cellars for 25 to 45 days, and turned often. The salt is removed and the ham allowed to mature for three weeks. Next it is rubbed by hand with a thick coat of black pepper. Then it goes into the smokehouse to hang for 30 days and nights over hand tended fires, until the juices drip and the dense, pungent hickory smoke permeates and flavors the meat. Then to darkened aging rooms, to hang for months.

And finally, just before shipment, each ham (in a 40-hour process) is soaked, simmered, the skin removed, the fat trimmed, then glazed with sugar and baked with wine to a savory feast of firm, sweet and tender meat.

A Virginia Ham at Christmas

is one of the new world's oldest traditions. A gift of excellence, immediately recognized as such. Enjoyed and appreciated by the whole family. Guaranteed to arrive in perfect condition.

Your Jordan's ham arrives ready to be enjoyed, needs no heating. It keeps for weeks and weeks. Traditional for Christmas dinner . . . perfect for cocktail party or buffet.

Sealed in amber cellophane, nested in burgundy tissue in Old Virginia Smokehouse box (carving, serving and keeping suggestions enclosed), here is a magnificent gift for those you especially wish to please this year, and a grand treat for your family.

We guarantee complete satisfaction. Weight 9 to 15 lbs. cooked; $1.89 per lb. (net cooked wt.) shipped anywhere in continental U. S. Shipped anywhere in world for $2.24 per lb. Please specify whether wanted now; for Christmas; or other date.

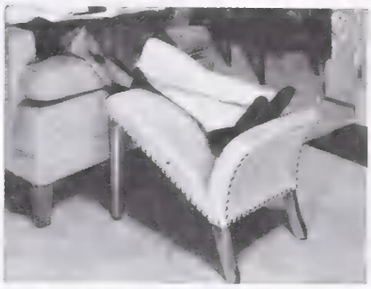
ALL THAT GLITTERS is not gold, but gleaming golden starbursts. And here is a galaxy of them. They're laminated gold-foil paper spreadouts with countless uses. Tape a few to the wall, to a mirror, or hang them like mobiles for a pretty play of shadow. Pkg. of 6 includes 1 of 22" diam.; 1 of 15"; 2 of 10"; 2 of 6½". $1.49 a set; 2 sets, $2.85. Elron, 352 W. Ontario, Chicago 10.

ENGLISH CAMEOS, handcrafted of sterling silver, have an antiqued finish that makes them look as old and aristocratic as the originals made in 1680. Pin and earrings are $3.75 each. Bracelet, $7.50. Three-piece set, $13.75. Matching necklace (not shown), $9. Cuff links, $5 the pair. Gift-boxed. Tax incl. The Jamaica Silversmith, 79-32 164th St., Jamaica 32, N. Y.

"LET'S PLAY HOUSE!" choruses the gang on rainy days. And then they improvise with your percale sheets and Chippendale chairs. So get this Card Table Playhouse. Sturdy cotton, printed in bright colors, it fits over bridge table, has a pole to prop roof into a peak, a door bell that rings. For the boys, there's a Fire House. $3.95 each. Meredith's, Evanston 25, Ill.



CASHMERE MUFFLER, to keep a man both comfortable and smart in winter weather, is custom-made and comes with three embroidered initials, self fringe. Choose navy with silver gray initials, brown with ivory, or gray with black. $8.95. Matching silk-lined tie (also with monogram), $5.95. Specify initials in order desired. Downs & Co., Dept. 1112, Evanston, Ill.

The most rugged doormat ever made . . . $6.65 (postpaid)

The Aristocrat of Mats—this doormat (imported from Haiti) is woven of native sisal. It is big enough (30 by 20 inches) to cover the space in front of your door and effectively intercept any mud or dirt that the unwary might carry on their shoes. The waffle pattern of the husky woven strands scrapes off the dirt and lets it fall through to be swept up later; it can't get clogged up. No bristles to shed. Wears for years. The perfect gift for people who have just moved into a new home.

Pietra Tramontano, Italian, age 6. Father dead. Mother struggles to support Pietra, her two little sisters and aged grandmother. Only income $10.00 per month. Live in poorest quarters in small village. Child knows only hunger and privation. Sad, wistful. Never owned a doll. Case urgent. Help to Pietra means life itself, hope, love . . . to a whole family.

You alone, or as a member of a group, can help these children by becoming a Foster Parent. You will be sent the case history and photograph of "your child" upon receipt of application with initial payment. "Your child" is told that you are his or her Foster Parent. At once the child is touched by love and a sense of belonging. All correspondence is through our office, and is translated and encouraged. We do no mass relief. Each child, treated as an individual, receives a monthly cash grant of eight dollars plus food, clothing, shelter, education and medical care according to his or her needs. Your help is vital to a child struggling for life. Won't you let some child love you?

Plan is a non-political, non-profit, non-sectarian, government-approved, independent relief organization, helping children, wherever the need—in France, Belgium, Italy, Greece, Korea, Viet Nam, Hong Kong and Tibet—and is registered under No. VFA019 with the Advisory Committee on Voluntary Foreign Aid of the United States Government and is filed with the National Information Bureau in New York City. © 1959 FPP, Inc.

In this Texas attorney's home, Heritage furniture is a living tradition

A busy law practice leaves little time for planned-ahead parties. Spur-of-the-moment dinners—casserole, salad and a good French wine—are a tradition here. Heritage furniture is, too. Their first apartment had one piece. This spacious home is all Heritage. That versatile "rafraichissoir" just arrived. It can be a wine cooler, an end table or a planter. Inspired by an 18th century design found in France, it shows Heritage's genius for interpreting the best of the past for today's way of life and for tomorrow. When you know fine furniture, you can tell Heritage at a glance. And you will always find the Heritage hallmark branded on the wood or woven into the upholstery.

Furniture shown from the Toulon group in Heritage's Mediterranea collection. Mail fifty cents for complete booklet—living, dining, bedroom collections—to Heritage Furniture, Inc., Dept. HB-12, High Point, North Carolina.

BLACK MYSTERY BOX

The final devastating answer to the push-button age (and the answer is an enlightened "No"). Press the switch on top of the little black box, and immediately there is a grinding of hidden power, the lid slowly rises, and a hand emerges. It grabs the switch, pushes it to "off," and then quickly disappears back into the box. The lid shuts, and all is as it was. Battery operated. Size 4½"x3½"x4". $4.98 Postpaid. No C.O.D.'s.

Now . . . at last . . . the first complete picture map of the Civil War—as breathtaking and as magnificent as any map ever designed. All the pageantry and gallantry of that epic struggle is spread across the SEVEN SQUARE FEET of this giant wall picture map.

Shows Nearly 100 Campaigns

Nearly 100 places, events and campaigns of decisive importance are pinpointed and numbered on the map, and a special guide lists the dates and complete information on each. It's a treasure trove of facts on the Civil War, accurately and beautifully presented.

Printed in Brilliant 4-color

The facts are presented against a background of brilliant four-color. A glance tells where the "Blues" and the "Grays" fought, and the other colors brighten the map, make it easy to read, ideal for framing.

Includes 8 Side Paintings

Some of the major events of this struggle are highlighted in individual oil paintings that provide a vivid border for the map. They include:

1. A full-length portrait of Stonewall Jackson during his Valley Campaign of May-June, 1862.
2. Grant's siege of Vicksburg, May 18-July 4, 1863.
3. The war at sea—The Alabama under Confederate Admiral Semmes sunk by Kearsage off France, June 19, 1864.
4. Portrait of Sheridan on his favorite mount during the Shenandoah Valley campaign, August-October, 1864.
5. Opening bombardment of Fort Sumter, April 12-13, 1861.
6. Battles of Bull Run-Manassas, June 21, 1861 and the 2nd Battle, August 27-September 1, 1862.
7. Battle of Gettysburg, July 1-3, 1863.
8. Appomattox—Lee and Grant signing surrender at McLean House, April 9, 1865.

And in addition to each of these paintings (all in bright, full color), there are full length paintings of Union and Rebel soldiers, showing their uniforms and correct equipment in fine detail.

Used by Schools, Colleges and Libraries

Thousands have been sold all over the United States, many just to individuals interested in the Civil War, many to collectors, but also thousands to schools, colleges and libraries for use in teaching, for reference work and for prizes (well worth framing).

Created by Grosset & Dunlap
One of America's Leading Publishers

Grosset & Dunlap, one of the finest publishing firms in the world, commissioned and supervised the research on this map—research done by three leading scholars, and this beautiful map has been on sale in the country's bookstores for $2.95.

Only $1 ppd.

But now, House of Maps, by special agreement with Grosset & Dunlap, can offer this magnificent work to you for just $1 ppd. This is the first time this map has ever been offered at this price. Don't wait. Buy one now—for your children, for yourself, for your school or library. Each map is shipped in a special mailing tube to prevent creasing. Only $1 ppd. each, 3 for $2. THE ART OF THE JAPANESE GARDEN

By Tatsuo Ishimoto, author of The Art of Flower Arrangement, etc. The designing of the Japanese garden is an art that has evolved over 14 centuries. In this new book a famous oriental horticulturist shows you how to combine the basic, traditional Japanese elements of stone, water, simple fencing and permanent planting in your own American garden to create a lovely landscape that will enchant through all seasons, year after year. The 200 exquisite photographs were taken by the author in Japan.

Now—the clean new look in cookware

You'll never want any other cookware, once you've seen the clean, new look of this. It's the new Revere Ware Designers' Group—a revolution in cooking, a revelation in styling.

You'll find it by far the most practical cookware you've ever used. A copper core permanently bonded between two sturdy layers of stainless steel spreads heat fast and evenly across the bottom and up the sides.

See for yourself its many wonderful new features. Stay-cool handles have cleverly-recessed hanging rings. Flat bottoms and wider diameters perform perfectly on any range—especially the new controlled-heat models. And it's gleaming stainless steel inside and out. So easy to care for!

No wonder Revere Ware Designers' Group makes cooking—and cleaning—less work than ever. And isn't it just the gift you've been looking for? Revere Copper and Brass Incorporated, Rome, New York—makers of the world's finest cookware.

NOW! THE MISSILE YOU CAN FLY!
AN EXACT 1/20th SCALE MODEL OF U. S. NAVY'S Aerobee-Hi research rocket!

- Rises 1,000 feet at 150 mph, ejects parachute for safe return
- Applauded by scientists & engineers as the answer to safe model rocketry
- Cape Canaveral in miniature — Educational, reliable, unique
- 4 years to develop, $50,000 production tooling
- Missile and rocket motor tested at U.S. White Sands Proving Grounds
- Rocket motor (pound of thrust every 2 seconds) classified safe "propellant device" by I.C.C.

15,000 man hours of engineering research went into development of this incredible 1/20th scale model of the U. S. Navy's Aerobee-Hi missile which will zoom up 1,000 feet (at 150-200 mph), eject a parachute from its soft vinyl nose cone, lower itself safely to earth. It takes 5 minutes to repack chute, install a new motor, and missile is ready for flight again. Solid fuel rocket motor—classified safe by I.C.C.—was introduced with missile in a feature article in Mechanix Illustrated Magazine. Easily assembled, kit contains all necessary materials, includes 6 rocket motors and single rail launcher for $9.95 ppd. Scaled, 42" high all-steel launching tower—adjustable over 10° are for wind correction—in complete kit, $9.95 ppd. Additional motors—6 for $2.95 ppd. Money back guarantee.

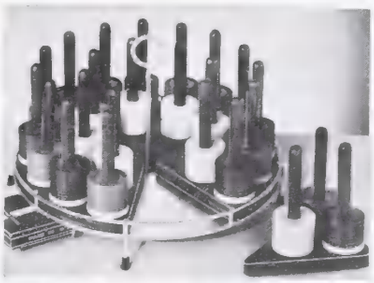
THE ALPINE HOOD from France is wonderfully cozy, very flattering. The design originated in the Alps where warm headgear is worn to ward off cold, snowy blasts of wind. It's feather-light, fluffy soft, fits all sizes, teens to adults. 85% wool, 15% cotton, in striped red/black or white/black; solid red, royal, beige, turquoise. $3.95. Order from Cortley Gifts, 453 E 88th, New York 28.

TIME-O-PHONE. We tested this for a week and found we couldn't part with it. It's a Swiss watch that fits over the center of any telephone dial, has a luminous dial with automatic date calendar, and a 12-minute sweep hand for timing calls. If you keep your eye on it, your telephone bills will be a pleasant surprise. $13.20 incl. tax. Taylor Gifts, Wayne 1, Pa.



FRUIT-TREE CENTERPIECE. Its decorative capacity is enormous. Its price is ridiculously low. Leaves of metal in natural green hold fresh or artificial fruits. As a lemon tree, it will permeate your room with a delightful fragrance. 9½" tree for lemons, limes, plums. $14.85. 11" tree for oranges, apples, etc., $12.85. Malcolm's, 6309 Reisterstown Rd., Baltimore 15, Md.

ELECTRIC CHINA POT. Use it for brewing up a batch of water for soul-soothing tea or brain-tingling coffee. After skating, it's nice for cocoa for a crowd. White porcelain china pot with moss rose design, gold trim, heats 6 cups of water to boil in 2½ minutes, keeps things hot for ages. UL-approved cord incl. 7¼" h., $3.50. Crown Craft Products, 246 5th Ave., New York 1.

Poker-Go-Round

Individual wedges of walnut provide each of eight players with his own chip organizer to hold the special, center-bored chips. Speeds up game immeasurably. Wedges fit together neatly for storage in attractive brass-plated rack. 288 special chips included, but not playing cards. $18.95

Easy-care Nylon walks away with highest honors! It's schooled to shrug off soil, yet outwears any other carpet fiber. Callaway has taken this man-made wonder and carved bold new ventures in decorating excitement. See the results in 1960-new VALIANT, 100% DuPont Nylon quality-fashioned by Callaway in heartwarming colors like Gold and Rose (above), Georgia Clay, Moss Green, or Mink. Nine more! The price . . . a wonder, too, on even a beginner's budget. For made-right, priced-right carpeting luxury, see VALIANT and other Callaway carpets in every fine fiber at your nearby Callaway dealer. COPPER FOR COCKTAILS. Bring in a batch of chilled martinis in a gleaming copper shaker and everything is more gala. This smart shaker, a copy of an old milk can, is used, too, for milk at lunch time, or as a container for glossy greens, a bunch of first spring daffodils. Tin-lined. 8½" h., holds 6 to 8 cocktails. $7.50. The Country Store of Pine Bush, Pine Bush, N.Y.

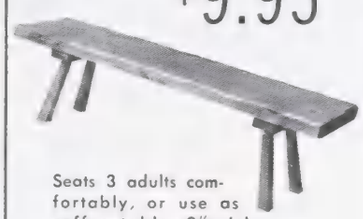
THE OWL & CLOWN are the colorful new pets of the autograph hounds. They're such silly old fellows that we bet even Fabian wouldn't be able to resist writing his John Hancock on their smooth bodies. Fun for a college girl, sorority sister, or just a gregarious little girl. 14" h. with ball-point pen. $2.25 each. Both, $4.25. Craft Shop, Inc., Cambridge 8, N.Y.

THE GOLD RUSH to these astonishing hug-me-tights is because they turn glasses into fashion plates, keep table tops wedding-bright. They fit any-size glass and there's not a drip in a bar load. Made of highly absorbent gold Lurex yarn, they retain their lustre indefinitely. Gift-boxed set of 8, $7.50. The Killinger Co., Marion, Va.



HAVE-A-SMOKE. Simply raise and lower this dispenser and up pops a cigarette. Leave one on the guest-room night-table, another on the telephone table, another in the living room—wherever chain smokers tend to congregate. White, pink or black plastic decorated with golden designs. $1 ea. 3, $2.85. Trend House, 303 Centre St., Newton 58, Mass.

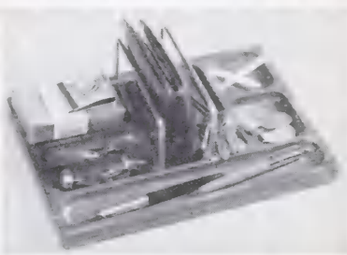
LIFETIME NAIL DRESSER



Cuts Faster Than File, Cleaner Than Emery. Shapes Nails Smoothly, Swiftly Effortlessly

Almost 61% of those who have ordered this meticulous, featherweight nail dresser immediately reorder for friends and family! There's a reason! It works a thousand times better than anything you've ever used and it need never be replaced. Precision-made of tiny sharp diamond and sapphire crystals bonded with pure nickel, it glides over your nails, shapes them gently, speedily, silently . . . with no rasping tug, no sandy scratch (as from files and short-lived emery boards). A manicuring miracle that makes it easy to keep nails flawlessly groomed . . . from here to eternity! 4" wallet size $1.25. 6" purse size $1.50. 8" professional size $2.00.
Engraving: 75¢ per Nail Dresser (up to 3 initials). Each in Presentation Case.

an amazingly wide range of interests. There is general information as well as such specifics as diagrams and drawings of the construction of an organ, and what the instruments of the orchestra look like. This is an easy-flowing, enlightening, entertaining account that traces a broad panorama of musical history and development. It is no dull recitation of historical facts and dates, for Harman is a writer with definite ideas and a flair for expressing them vividly.

Men of Music, Brockway and Weinstock (Simon and Shuster, $1.95, 649 pages).

Here are fine biographies of many of the most significant composers in the history of music, beginning with men like Palestrina (c. 1525-1594) and Lassus (1532-1594) up to Stravinsky in our own time. These readable well-rounded profiles, 22 in all, reveal these men as human beings as well as musical geniuses. Especially valuable are the essays on Mendelssohn, Berlioz, and Brahms. There's a superb index for quick and easy reference. If it weren't for these men, there would be no music as we know it today, so this book is central to your reference library.

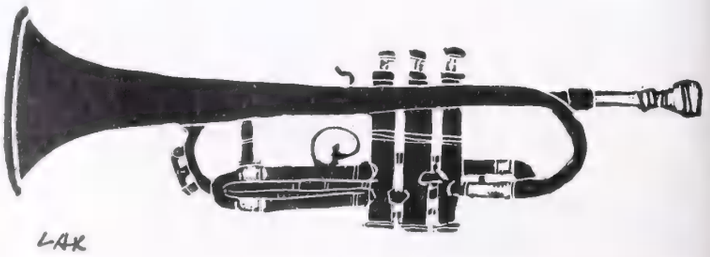
Penguin Books, published in England, have enlisted the services of some of Britain's most learned musicologists in the preparation of several volumes which go into quite detailed analyses of musical forms, periods, and personages. There are four single volumes which together comprise a series called The Music Masters, and three individual volumes which deal respectively with The Symphony, The Concerto, and Chamber Music. We'll deal with each individually, but first one point to keep in mind: These seven books are oriented around the prevailing tastes and attitudes in British musical circles, and do not always square with American views. But once the reader is prepared for this he can settle back and enjoy the stimulating accounts of the high points in the lives of the most significant composers from the Sixteenth Century to the present time.

These are the seven books:

The Music Masters—Volume 1: From the Sixteenth Century to the Time of Beethoven (Penguin, 95 cents, 372 pages).

Every important composer who lived during the period embraced by this volume is profiled in depth in these pages. Among several superior essays the one on Henry Purcell (1659-1695) by the late Ralph Hill must be singled out as extraordinary. You'll also find engrossing accounts of less well-known composers such as William Byrd, Thomas Arne, and Thomas Weelkes.

The Music Masters—Volume 2: After Beethoven to Wagner (Penguin, 95 cents, 389 pages).



This volume deals with the period that produced more composers of lasting fame and importance than any other time in the history of mankind. The British point of view comes to the fore in this volume in the rather exhaustive biographies of Sterndale Bennett and Edward German. It certainly is true that these men played important parts in the development and nurturing of music in England during the Nineteenth Century, but they hardly merit representation alongside the real titans in the history of the art. But this prejudice can be overlooked in the light of the over-all value of the book.

Ralph Hill's article on Franz Liszt (1811-1886) and Dyneley Hussey's portrait of Meyerbeer (1791-1864) are especially perceptive and penetrating.

As in all of this series, the subheads within the chapters make it very easy to find details of such things as a composer's early life, major works, and outside influences.

The Music Masters—Volume 3: The Romantic Age (Penguin, 95 cents, 358 pages).

The book includes such composers as Bizet, Mahler, Puccini, and Tchaikovsky and 34 others.

The length of the chapters relates pretty much to the importance of the man's contribution to music.

Along with basic biographical material on the composers covered, each author manages to pin down the essential nature and motivating character of the personalities involved. The writing is personal and warmly illuminating.

The Music Masters—Volume 4: The Twentieth Century (Penguin, 95 cents, 416 pages).

Profound, personal portraits of the British composers Gustav Holst (1874-1934) and Ralph Vaughan Williams (1872-1958) are particularly distinguished contributions to this volume. The writer of both profiles is A. E. F. Dickinson, a gentleman otherwise completely unknown to me. But he writes with intense devotion to his subjects. Here you'll find such well-known names as Bartok, Ravel, Richard Strauss, and Stravinsky along with 50 of their contemporaries.

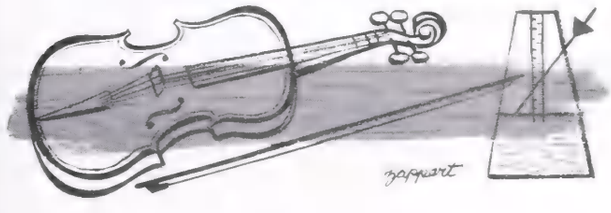
While the profiles in the music master series are not deeply penetrating analyses of the men and their work, the important aspects of their careers are revealed in interesting style, and there are brilliant insights into the characters of some. The composers are dealt with in alphabetical rather than chronological order. While this makes for easier indexing and probably allows for quicker location of reference material, I would have sacrificed these considerations in the interests of a more panoramic view of the historical evolution of periods and styles that a chronological arrangement would have afforded. However, the Brockway-Weinstock book on Men of Music helps cover the broader aspects. The volumes on The Symphony, The Concerto, and Chamber Music do arrange their material in chronological order which provides a better understanding of the overall development of each kind of music.

The Symphony—Edited by Ralph Hill (Penguin, 85 cents, 416 pages).

The Concerto—Edited by Ralph Hill (Penguin, 95 cents, 448 pages).

Chamber Music—Edited by Alec Robertson (Penguin, 95 cents, 427 pages).

In each of these three volumes the basic organization of the book is the same: First, there's an essay by the editor on the form and character of each particular kind of music. Then comes a series of essays on those composers whose output is most significant in the over-all literature of each form, with analytical and descriptive discussion of the composers' music. Each book includes a number of notations from the scores themselves so the reader who reads music may see at a glance the point made by the writer. I must add, though, that no musical education is necessary to understand and enjoy the texts. Any reader, whether or not he is musically knowledgeable to begin with, will find his understanding greatly broadened and intensified.



Each of these books takes you inside the structure of the music it discusses and tells you how various composers approached their work. They explain the contribution that outstanding composers have made to the art, and put their work into perspective with the times and the work of others.

If you study any composer included in these books and then listen to a recording or concert performance of the pieces you have read about, you will be amazed at how much more enjoyable the music can be. The books also help you pick out the most rewarding works of the major composers. This is a great aid to buying.

In addition to the general discussion of the musical forms, each of the volumes contains gems of especially outstanding value. Among these I especially enjoyed the chapter on "The Virtuoso Violin Concerto," written by Hubert Foss in The Concerto. In brilliant fashion he traces the history and evolution of the violin concerto from its early beginnings in Italy.

Another superlative contribution is Stephen William's essay on Schumann for The Symphony. So persuasive is he in his enthusiasm for the music and so disarmingly frank in his admission of some of its weaknesses that I, for one, cannot argue with him when he says, "I would rather listen to a bad symphony by Schumann than a good symphony by ....." with the blank to be filled in at the reader's own discretion.

The book Chamber Music provides a delightful way to whet the appetite for this subtle music and get more out of it when you hear it.

Of course no musical library would be complete without references to opera. These two books are well worth a place on your bookshelf.

Stories of Famous Operas, Milligan (Signet, 50 cents, 318 pages).

Introduction to Opera—Edited by Mary Ellis Peltz (Barnes & Noble, $1.65, 332 pages).

The Milligan book presents plot analyses and synopses of 57 operas from the active repertoire, including such rather recent works as Britten's Peter Grimes and Menotti's The Medium. It is a fine quick reference to the highlights of each opera and includes all of those you are likely to wonder about.

The other volume is more ambitious. Among its contributors are several of America's leading authorities on opera, including the late Herbert F. Peyser, Robert Lawrence, Paul Nettl, and Paul Jaretzki. Only 40 operas are treated here and these are all from the standard repertoire, but each work is more exhaustively studied, with a synopsis of the action followed by an essay on the opera in question, its special quality, and its place in the operatic literature.

This is the book for more leisurely and thoughtful perusal of the stories. Especially noteworthy are Peyser's articles on Bizet's Carmen and Mozart's Don Giovanni and Jaretzki's on Wagner's Siegfried. In addition, there is a fine analysis by C. J. Luten at the end of the book of some of the recordings of the 40 operas in question.

And now we come to two reference volumes of surpassing merit:

A New Dictionary of Music, by Arthur Jacobs (Penguin, 95 cents, 416 pages).

This book was published in 1958, and is thoroughly up to date. It includes, for example, a reference to Samuel Barber's opera, Vanessa, which was first performed in that year. Jacobs is a first-class lexicographer with a quick and inquisitive mind. His Dictionary contains a wealth of information, including a surprisingly complete treatment of music on the American scene (surprising when you consider that Jacobs is an Englishman). All contemporary American composers of consequence are dealt with fairly and forthrightly, including many from the younger generation whose omission would have been understandable.

A Dictionary of Ballet, by G. B. L. Wilson (Penguin, 95 cents, 283 pages).

This fine book is as thorough a lexicography of ballet as I can imagine. It deals with the important people, places and things of ballet and includes technical terms and phrases which are a great help to the neophyte. There are also sketches of many ballet positions and forms and brief histories of most of the world's great ballet companies. Capsule story outlines of many of the ballets in the repertoire complete a very thorough coverage. You'll look at ballet or listen to the records with a good deal more interest after perusing this volume.

The Book of Jazz, Leonard Feather (Meridian, $1.35, 260 pages).

This book does for jazz what has long needed doing. It puts the emphasis on the instruments, the men who play them, and the structure of the music, and gives short shrift to the usual "Up the River from New Orleans" historical saga. Mr. Feather devotes only 35 pages to the history of the music, and these are concerned with his ideas on the seed, root, and growth of jazz and differ significantly from the usual account.

The organization of the book is admirable. In a section called "The instruments, the sounds, the performers," all the instruments of jazz are considered one by one. This includes the part each instrument has played in the development of the music and a thorough exposition of the most noteworthy practitioners on each instrument from the beginnings of jazz right up to today.

Another section called the "The Anatomy of Improvisation" is an unusually successful, written explanation of the essence of jazz music. You'll get more out of this if you know music, but it is valuable for anyone who wants to learn what makes jazz sound the way it does.

There it is, then—a basic music reference library for less than $15, or less than the cost of a pair of orchestra seats for a Broadway musical. Offhand I can't think of a greater musical bargain.

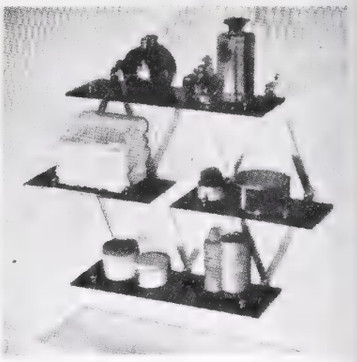
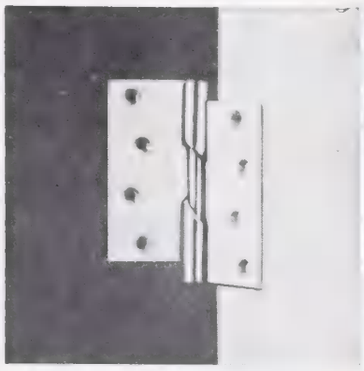
Imported poacher for fish has rack insert to facilitate removing cooked fish intact. A very convenient way to cook asparagus or corn. Heavy-gauge aluminum with high-polish on exterior. Sizes: 16" x 5½", 18" x 6", 20" x 6", 24" x 7½"; $10.95, $13.95, $16.95, $20.95. Large sizes afford ideal casserole for any foods in party supply. Also available in copper. Bazar Francais, 666 Sixth Avenue, New York, N. Y.



Correspondence course in creative crewel embroidery has been evolved by an eminent needlecraft authority. Linen twill sampler is conceived to teach 23 different stitches adaptable to countless designs. Sampler you make is handsome, for footstool, wall, etc. Kit (stamped sampler, crewel wool yarns, needles) and course, $35. A further series is planned. Erica Wilson Kagan, Box 148, Gracie Station, New York 28, N. Y.

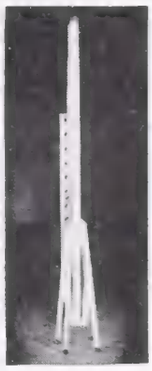
Suction cups fasten Masslinn's towel rack in any convenient spot. In tiniest bathroom, guest towels are always out so you needn't wonder in midst of a party whether you forgot to provide some. On patio wall, rack provides temporarily for drying rinsed hands when chicken-eaters come a-running. Brass finish on wrought iron, 12" x 6½", and 32 Masslinn towels, $3.50. Downs & Co., Evanston, Ill.



Solid brass and fine Carrara glass are elegantly united in this Handy-Andy shelf unit. If preferred, shelves can be Lucite. Handsome accessory for vanity table: in powder room it affords often-lacking place for guest towels, touch-up cosmetics; appropriate even in living room for bric-a-brac. Size 17" x 24", over-all. With glass shelves, black or white, $15.95; Lucite, $16.95. Bloomingdale's, N.Y.C. 22.

Ideal mattress pad for cribs creates downy comfort with Curon; waterproof impenetrability with plastic bonded to the "foam." Machine-washable; does not shrink or mat in laundering. Steril-Foam pad is non-inflammable, allergy-free, won't absorb odors. Curon, being an insulator, creates cool effect in summer, warming effect in winter: $2.99 (26" x 52"). Available for adult beds. Triangle Co., 519 W. Pratt, Baltimore 1, Md.

Door can't drag on carpeting or flooring if fitted with Spira-Lift hinge. Spiral pin causes door to raise when opened, holds it that way until door closes. The installation can provide door-closing by air pressure; in any event it holds the door closed without aid of latch. Built-in pin adds hinge strength; makes hinge vandal-proof. In 3½" size, $1.50; 4", $1.60. Applicable to any swinging door. Becker Hinge Co., El Monte, Calif.



Mere pennies invested in Plug Lock keeps a freezer safe from accidental disconnection and the resulting food spoilage. If the problem is Junior's delight in yanking loose appliance or lamp plugs and prying into vacated outlets, Plug Lock prevents this hazardous pastime. Adjusts to fit any plug; pinioned to outlet plate by screw. Brown, heavy-duty plastic, $2 for 6. Lord George Ltd., 1270 Broadway, New York, N. Y.

For travel, the Colton-Lewis folding rack is a clothes valet: used at home it nicely solves the problem of limited closet space in guest room. Set up in entrance hall, its facilities take care of guests' coats; on the back porch it is a drier for wet rain gear. Works on the same principle as a folding music stand. De luxe construction of heavy aluminum. $9.95. Here's How, 95 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY FRED LERNER

Easy remedy for squeaky flooring is supplied by Steel-X automatic bridging. You merely place the ready-to-use device between two joists; down-pull action automatically wedges bridging into locked position. Guaranteed to eliminate any floor squeak resulting from loose wood joists. Made of heavy steel; rustproofed; $4.50 supplies 10 sets (4 pieces per set). Taber-Bushnell Co., Metropolitan Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

Oven cleaning with Vapor-Brite is truly work-free. Just fill can with boiling water; set it into closed oven for 20 minutes. During that time chemical vapor, by saponizing action, converts baked-on grease or carbonized deposits into a soap substance wiped away with damp cloth. Non-toxic, non-inflammable: harmless to hands. $3.15 for 4 cans (each has 1-time use). Hammacher Schlemmer, New York 22.

NO WONDER WOMEN RAVE ABOUT REGINA Electrikbroom

SWEEPING THE COUNTRY

Tape cartridge, innovational stereo convenience by RCA, is as easy to handle and play as a phonograph record; no tape to thread or reels to rewind. You can buy pre-recorded tape-cartridges (now about 200 selections) or blank tape in cartridges for recording; $5 to $7 for approximate playing time of stereo discs. Cartridges must play on special machines; RCA and Bell Sound now make them. Priced from about $300 to $450; a monophonic model costs less. Available tape-transport units adapt other stereo equipment to new tape-cartridge.

Worthwhile appliances for small cooking needs are scarce, which adds interest to this brand-new pair. Both give fine service; have wide versatility. Bake N' Broil ($14.95) also fries, toasts, grills. A snap-in heating element converts appliance for the various services. Silv-A-King Baker ($6.95) is super for potatoes or apples, crisping.

With dental lavatory to divert toothbrushing traffic, another person can meanwhile use the general lavatory or mirror above it. Besides minimizing bathroom congestion, the fixture has value for its specialized service. Water aeration prevents the usual splash when toothbrush contacts faucet flow; a flushing rim at sides and front rinses entire basin area. Wall-mounting of fixture leaves area beneath free for stool or hamper; permits an installation at small-fry level. Kohler fixture, fine vitreous china, costs $54 (less piping and installation), in white. Size 14"x14"; 3½" shelf. Available in 6 colors.

How to leave home and like it

Besides the come-on of its climate, beaches, and sociability, Antigua has romantic overtones of 18th-century British architecture and manners.

ANTIGUA—A Collector's Item for Island Collectors

Here's a rediscovered tropical isle that's old in history but a new experience in casual getting-away-from-it-all

By WILLIAM B. POWELL

● There seems to be a growing group, myself included, whose hobby is "collecting" islands. Not to own, necessarily—although many are doing just that around the Bahamas—but to have as one's own Shangri-La.

Of course those islands stretching below Puerto Rico and Jamaica have hundreds of staunch rooters and there's no denying that "the Virgins," Haiti, Tobago, and the other Leeward and Windward islands are good finds and havens, not just for winter retreats but for summer, too.

Two years ago, looking for a new place to go, where it was sure to be warm when other southlands were freezing, I was referred by a friend to Antigua. In my mind it was just a name that I lumped along with St. Kitts, St. Croix, Grenada, and all the others of the chains that dot the blue waters of the Caribbean. (It is pronounced, by the way, "Anteega," without sounding the u, as it is in the Guatemala city of the same name.) (Please turn to page 201)

PHOTOGRAPHS BY PIX, INC

History adds colorful piquancy to Antigua's tropical beauty. From Shirley Heights you see English Harbour where Lord Nelson once hid his fleet.

This is Spain's slow "solera" method of producing true sherry...by adding vintage after vintage to preceding years' sherries. The new 1959 wine is mixed, little by little, with older sherry in the top row of piled-up casks. Years later, some of the maturing wine will be drawn off into still older casks below. The final casks yield "finos" (dry sherries), or "amontillado" (medium sherries) or the precious "olorosos" (mature, sweet, "cream" type). True sherries come only from Jerez (we call it "sherry") de la Frontera, in Spain.

The Sherry you can drink "instead"

Your friends, you'll notice, are drinking more sherry these days...instead of mixed cocktails.

Imported sherry is a "mixed" drink, too. But the mixing of today's cocktail sherry started many years ago.

"Mixing", indeed, is the life story of all Harvey's sherries. From one cask to another stacked below it, maturing Sherry wine is mixed, a little at a time, at intervals of several years.

Finally, from the casks containing the sweeter "oloroso" sherries, choice shipments are brought by Harvey's to Bristol, England. Blended and bottled there, they reach you as Harvey's Bristol Cream. Through the blender's art, a bottle of it which you buy today, tastes exactly the same as in Queen Victoria's reign.

Instead of a cocktail, you can choose from 6 imported sherries under Harvey's label...all the way from "fino" (dry) and "amontillado" (medium) to "oloroso" (sweet).

BY APPOINTMENT TO HER MAJESTY QUEEN ELIZABETH II
WINE MERCHANTS, JOHN HARVEY & SONS, LTD.
FOUNDED 1796

BRISTOL DRY®. Pale, light "fino", a truly "dry" sherry. Serve chilled or "on the rocks".

HARVEY'S AMONTILLADO "instead of a cocktail." An amber-colored "medium".

BRISTOL CREAM®. The years have made it more costly, more golden, more sweet...incomparable.

Christmas is in your hands as well as your heart

● The Christmas most of us remember as the real Christmas happened in our childhood. It was not just one glorious day, but a whole exhilarating season of creativity, a time for the great making of little gifts and festive frivolities, with every hand at work shaping the trimmings and the light-hearted trappings of the lovely holiday.

The snip of the scissors, the rustle of paper, the swish of the paste brush—these are sounds as nostalgic as the chiming of bells and the voices of carolers. Don't they recall the heady atmosphere of Doing that surrounded us, the sense of being part of Christmas, our innocent joy when our work brought a smile to someone we loved?

That was really Christmas—a childhood joy you may think you can never relive. But you can! The secret of recapturing that long-ago enthusiasm is to put your hands and imagination to work once again, making Christmas a time of personal creativity. To transport you back into that happy mood of doing, this issue teems with decorations you can make yourself, and once more we offer our annual collection of ornaments ready for you to arrange with your own imaginative hands. To start recapturing the creative joys of your childhood Christmas, turn the page.

House Beautiful's Sixth Annual Collection of Christmas Decorations

RING GLOBES, glittering interlockings of foil-cardboard rings, hang free and mobile to give a Christmas room moving, glinting color and fascinating shadows. Used as fixed ornaments (right), they have the look of fantastic astrolabes. In two sizes, 8″ and 12″ in diameter, in four colors. Four pieces, two of each size, in assorted colors. $5.

DISCBALLS are the 12-sided, flat-surfaced balls above and at far left in the large picture. Of gold-foil-covered cardboard, printed red, blue, and green, they can dangle in space, trim a tree, or be formed into ornaments of your own. They come as flat pentagons which you assemble, bending their die-cut corners and stapling them together. In a packet of 72 pieces, to make six Discballs, one of each color and each size, 7-inch and 9-inch diameter, stapler included, $6.

STARBALLS, the many-faceted crystal-like shapes below and at left, combine gold foil and red, blue, and green. They are flat squares to be creased into dimension, stapled into shape. Packet of 36 makes six Starballs, one of each color and size, 6-inch and 11-inch diameter, stapler included. $6.

Gleaming before you on these nine pages is HOUSE BEAUTIFUL's Sixth Annual Collection of Christmas Decorations. As with all previous collections, there is more here than meets the eye. Since HOUSE BEAUTIFUL takes as firm a stand against aimless, uncoördinated decoration at Christmas as at any other time of year, we've designed these to make Christmas a practice run in the best principles of decorative design. Most are importantly scaled, so you need only a few for big effects. They're bound to go together because they are compatible in quality, form, material, and color.

Chief colorings are blue, green, and red, set off by a strong glint of gold, which blends with furnishings most people own, including their trimmings of former years. Their versatility invites you to use them in other ways than we've shown. They're mainly of foil, foil-coated cardboard, and plastics. Most come flat to store easily.

They are made and sold, by mail order only, by Home Decor by Austen, 133 West 19th St., New York. Directions for ordering are given on page 137.

FOIL ROSES, light-catching fairy blossoms of tinted aluminum foil, can lend their elegant twinkle to almost any trimming project you have in mind. Above they wreathe and garland a chandelier from David Barrett. At right they are all the brilliance needed to glorify a tree against a luxurious Van Luit wallpaper and a Fortuny drapery. Lower right, with their stems wired into a sheet of screening, they compose into a light-hearted holiday bouquet. They are supple, easy to work with, keep their shapes tidily, and suggest lovely makings for Christmas wreaths, fireplace garlands, table trimming, or a pretty fillip for a gift package. They come in three sizes and eight assorted colors, in a package containing 24 roses (eight of each size) and 48 green foil leaves, for $5.

PACKAGE CHAIN, shown full-size here, is a pretty stringing-together of tiny simulated foil gift boxes and shiny gold glass beads. It's an amusing length of whimsey for draping the tree or a house plant, or to outline a door or window frame. See it on the frame at right. You get a 27-foot length for $5.

GOLDEN ROPE, a luxurious intertwining of golden metallic with satiny rayon yarns, might inspire a bowknot for a front door, above, a festoon around a dinner table, right, or a swag trimming anywhere. It's a fluid, manageable, nine-foot length, punctuated at each end with a plump 9½″ tassel, comes in red and gold, white and gold, and all gold. $9.

PHOTOGRAPHED BY HOWARD GRAFF AT CHARAK FURNITURE CO.

ASPEN SPRAY GARLAND, shown above, below, and on our front cover, calls up the enchantment of snow-laden fir branches powdered with stardust. It's actually made of flameproof and weatherproof white and metalized vinyl plastic, as durable outdoors as in. Lush branches are firmly caught in a wire base so the spray can be bent into any conformation you want. Our cover shows how gracefully it drapes in a festoon. The great starburst dominating the wall above is composed of short lengths. A nine-foot garland, 8½″ in diameter, comes in white dusted with either gold or silver. $7.50.

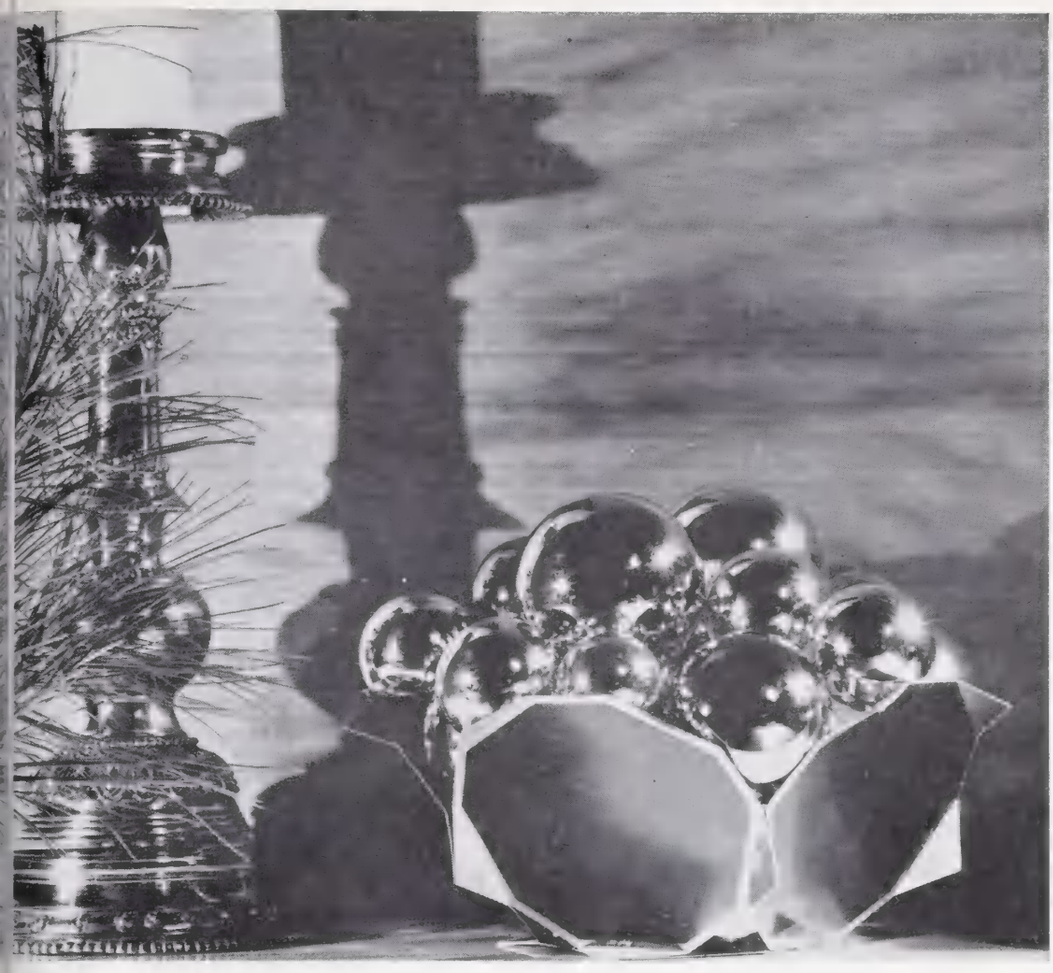
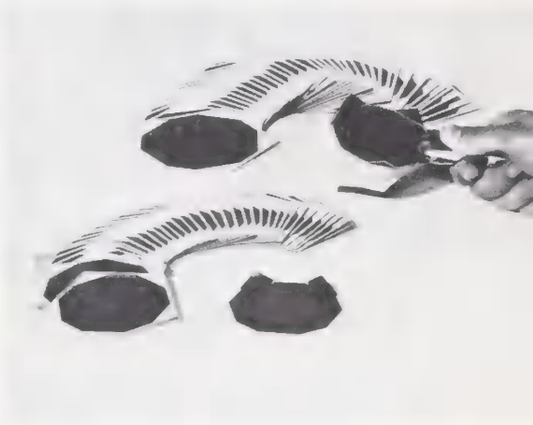
GOLD FOIL TABLE MATS AND COASTERS surround place settings like sunbursts. They come in a single die-cut sheet. You punch out the parts, pinch their sharp points into dimensions, and voilà — a sumptuous table setting. Shown at left, Gorham Sterling, Fostoria glass, Rosenthal-Bloch china, Fortuny wall fabric, and chairs from Herbert Lanning. Gold Foil Table Mats and Coasters come in sets of four sheets, providing four 14″ place mats, four 9″ place mats, four 5″ coasters, and 16 stars. $2.50.

GOLDEN SHELF TREE bears a sweet burden of Christmas goodies on a table centerpiece above, carries a load of "stocking gifts" by the fireside at right, might be decked with baubles, flowers, fruits, costume jewelry. Or you might use it as a holiday muffineer in the living room, holding cookies, fruit cake, and wine for the guests who drop in. With any trim it's a brilliant eyeful. It's four hinged, tree-shape wings of gold-foil-covered cardboard which come folded flat, as sketch shows, including three round shelves, ready to assemble easily according to instructions. You pull out the wings and insert the shelves. Foil-covered on all sides, it stands 24″ tall with a 15″-diameter base. Three platforms are 6″, 8½″, and 12″ in diameter. $5.50.

BOX, LANTIN AND FARHADI; CRYSTAL JAR, NESLE; FABRIC, SCALAMANDRE SILKS



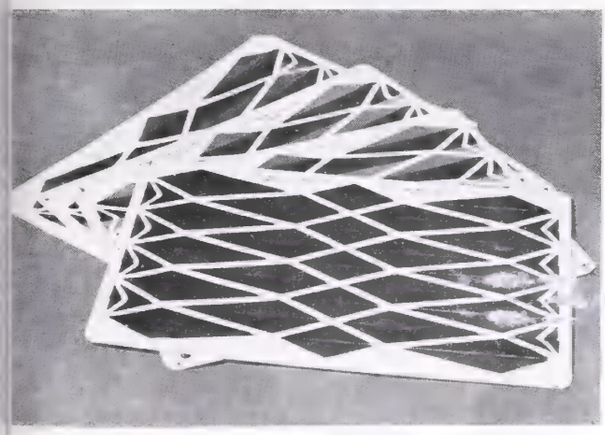
THIS IS A GILT-EDGED BARGAIN in large-scale Christmas drama. With only 39 Stickler Star Ray pieces—the contents of a single sheet—we filled this 14″ x 21″ windowpane with a great starburst of light-sifted color. While Sticklers come to you as basic geometric shapes, they suggest their own compositions. Let your pattern radiate from a center focal point. Your eye helps you fill in appropriate spaces. Each package has 72 4½″ rays, 20 ¾″ rays and 32 1⅜″ rays, plus 64 tiny pieces, all usable.



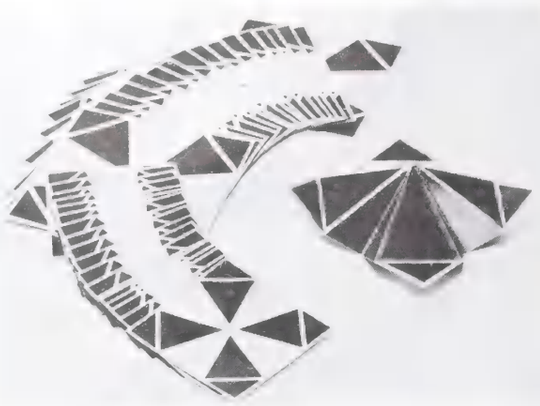
THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY HOWARD GRAFF

STICKLER STAR RAYS are amazing snippets of translucent printed plastic that can turn a windowpane or mirror into a glory of stained-glass color. You arrange these wedge and ray shapes in compositions to please your fancy. Their great magic is that they stick, and stay stuck, with no adhesive needed, to any hard, glossy surface that is free of dust and grease. They come in flat die-cut sheets, laid on foil-covered cards. You peel their geometric shapes off the cards and apply them as you will. In two color combinations, blue-green and purple-violet, all delineated in gold, they come in a set of four sheets, two of each color. $4.

THE ABSORBING CREATIVE ADVENTURE that was Christmas in your childhood is reopened to you by Sticklers. They encourage you to use your hands and your ingenuity in devising new and different patterns. They're glamorous to work with, like painting pictures with gold-streaked slivers of amethyst, emerald and sapphire. Best of all, they're so simple to use you can easily experiment, peeling them off and starting over again if your first attempts don't please you. Their shapes suggest forms, like these fantastic trees for a child's room.



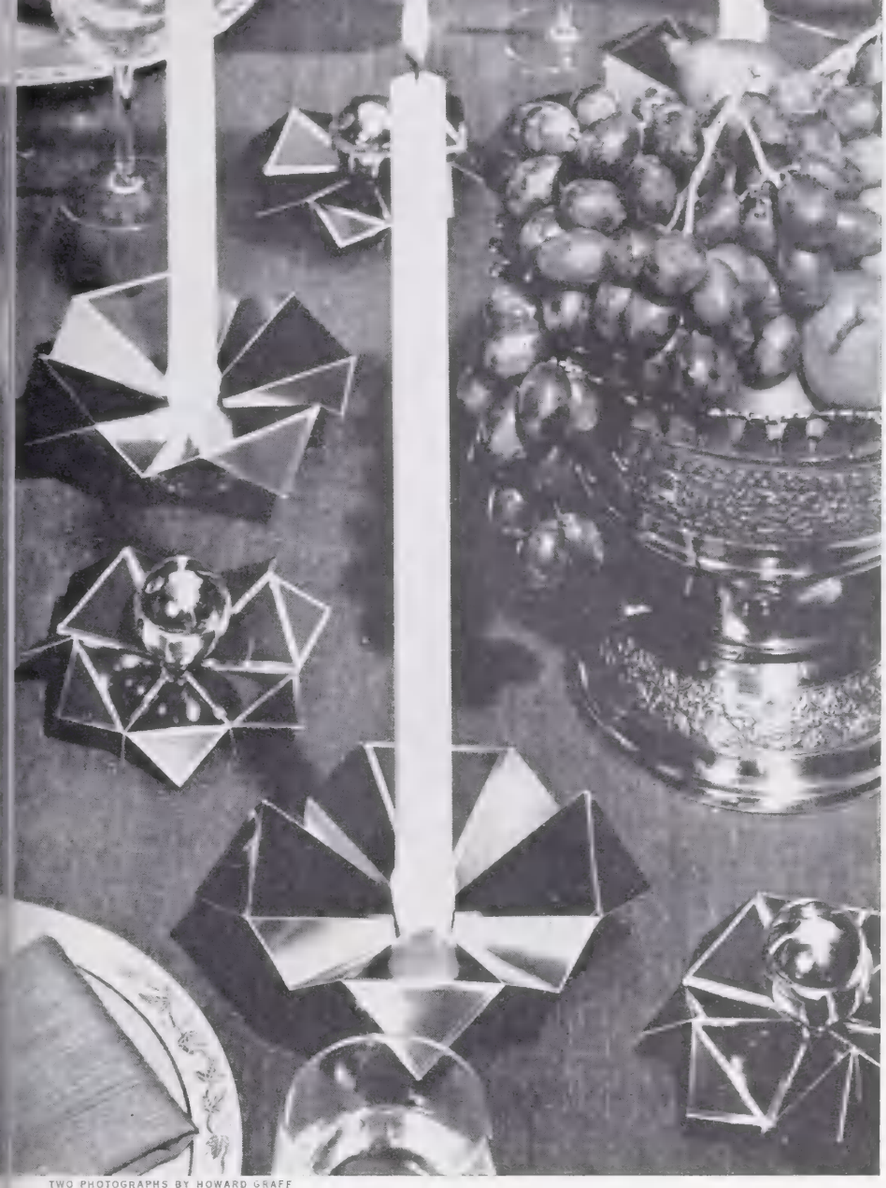
You've seen our Discballs put to their chief use as colorful baubles to hang or to place in ornamental piles. Now see what pleasing extras you can create of their component parts. Left, the basket for glitter balls might also hold fruit or cookies or make a holiday slipcover for a flower pot. It's a joining of flat Discball components, in the large size. Below, Discball pieces form candleholders. Above, see the flat, die-cut pieces as they come, packaged with a stapler, 1000 staples, and instructions. To see the versatility of our Starballs, turn the page.



Take Christmas into your own hands with these ornaments. They invite you to create new shapes and uses for them

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY HOWARD GRAFF

This is how Star Ray Sticklers come to you—in sheets of die-cut plastic. You pull off each shape separately. Their design is so remarkable that they fit into pleasing compositions with almost mathematical inevitability. Clinging plastic is a wonder, too.



CHRISTMAS IS IN YOUR HANDS

continued

This is how Starballs reach your hands, in a packet of die-cut foil cardboard squares printed in bright diamond patterns, with a stapler and 1000 staples included. Mystifying until you read the instructions and learn that you must crease these squares along their die-stamped lines to bring out their faceted dimensions. You then staple six of them together in a ball shape. But even alone, a flat square suggests other bright uses. The smashing wall composition below is made up of one large and six small components, each studded with a glitter ball. Opposite, single squares make fluted candle holders. China, Wedgwood. Brass bowl, Luten-Clarey-Stern. Candles, Will and Baumer. Japanese box, Charles Gracie.

More about the Ring Globes you see here and on page 129. Inspired by paper ornaments the Danes use on their Christmas trees, these foil cardboard circles are graduated in size and notched to lock within each other. They come assembled and flat.

Say Good-bye to the Holiday Maelstrom

How to plan your activities and time so that the excitement of the season becomes pure joy instead of a race against the clock

By MARIAN CARTER LEWIS

● "Twenty more days—just twenty more days until Christmas!" The good news is flung at me from every quarter: radio, television, the stores, my own children. But I am remembering a day last July when several of us lunching together made a Mid-Year's Resolution. We promised that: This year Christmas would be different; we would choose wisely and plan our time carefully so that the holiday would be a truly significant and satisfying experience for the whole family.

We realized then that it would take a great effort to keep off the accelerating treadmill of parties and more parties, for the young, for the old, for the medium; of presents and more presents—for ourselves, for others, teachers, relatives, and secretaries; of all the good, well-meaning activities that we go to or help at until our hands shake as we wrap the packages. Our stomachs tighten at the sound of the doorbell, and we long for vacation to be over and school to begin.

Does this have to be? Are we adults so unimaginative and so conditioned that we cannot find a solution? Christmas does not just happen. It is what you make it. At best it is a heart-warming time of worship and festivity, bringing people together beyond time and space. At worst it is a house full of cross children and a very weary mother. Must we be caught in a confusion of holy day and holiday, a maelstrom of activity no Tarzan, Paul Bunyan, or Superman could wade through with equanimity?

We talked of many things that 20th day in July:

Cards: This has grown into big business in many families taking hours to address, to assemble, or even to tint. Whom should you send them to? Everyone? Even to your close neighbors whom you will be running into all during the Christmas season? One woman who was at lunch that day sends cards only to the friends she rarely sees. On each one she takes the time to write a note of some length. She receives the same kind of card from these friends and considers this one of the most cherished aspects of her Christmas. Against this is the wholesale method of having cards printed with your name and sending them to just everybody. This is easy, but it can be expensive, and is not really much of a compliment to the recipient. Another friend said she had a picture of the children as her card, but had them made up without any printing. She would write in The Smiths with India ink herself or, if the card was going to friends who hadn't seen the children in a long time, she wrote in all their names. But the list itself is the real bottleneck. One woman made her list from those she received the year before. Most of us confessed that we carried on our lists unresponsive names for many years, but we all hated to delete the name of a one-time friend. To send or not to send—that is the question.

Parties: We divided this discussion into cocktail parties for the adults and all kinds of celebrations for the young. It is not easy to say "no" to an invitation, especially at Christmastime when everyone will probably be going and, when you have been doing so much for the young, you feel you could use a little gaiety of your own. But so often when the hour arrives you hesitate. Will it be just one more big noisy gathering? You go. And it is! We agreed that if anyone was planning to give a Christmas party the best advice was "Don't." Give it in November before Thanksgiving or in March when spring seems much too far behind.

If you feel that you must go to the cocktail party because it would hurt the hostess to decline, or you just have not the fortitude to refuse (it is nice to be there and have people know you were asked, too), then do not get caught up in the merriment and stay and stay. "I came, I saw, I departed early" is the best motto.

Activities: This was a much discussed subject. Those of us with a New England conscience felt we had an obligation to back up our children in their interests: to make cookies for the Scout celebration, to attend the school play, to make their costumes for the church pageant, to chaperone the dancing school party.

To one with several children in varying age groups this can mean a minimum of sixteen appearances. Then if she is also a room-mother responsible for the class party or a Sunday school teacher in charge of her class's part in the pageant, heaven help her. These celebrations are important to the children, for many hours in school are spent rehearsing for them, but fortunately most of them are over by the time vacation begins.

The aim here is not to get so tired with these activities that you are exhausted when vacation does begin. (Parents with older children must take them to and from the dance as well as spend sleepless hours chaperoning.)

Certainly the children do not have to go to every party during vacation. The sooner they realize that life, love, and the pursuit of happiness do not depend on attending a particular function, things begin to (Continued on page 196)

Christmas Eve

By C. DAY LEWIS

Come out for a while and look from the outside in
At a room you know
As the firelight fitfully beats on the windowpane
An old heart sinking low,
And the whispering melting kisses of the snow
Soothe time from your brow.

It is Christmastide. Does the festival promise as fairly
As ever to you? 'I feel
The numbness of one whose drifted years conceal
His original landmarks of good and ill.
For a heart weighed down by its own and the world's folly
This season has little appeal.'

But tomorrow is Christmas Day. Can it really mean Nothing to you? 'It is hard
To see it as more than a time-worn, tinsel routine,
Or else a night incredibly starred,
Angels, oxen, a Babe—the recurrent dream
Of a Christmas card.'

You must try again. Say 'Christmas Eve'. Now, quick,
What do you see?
'I see in the firelit room a child is awake,
Mute with expectancy
For the berried day, the presents, the Christmas cake.
Is he mine? or me?'

He is you, and yours. Desiring for him tomorrow's Feast—the crackers. the Tree, the piled Presents—you lose your self in his yearning, and borrow
His eyes to behold
Your own young world again. Love's mystery is revealed
When the father becomes the child.

'Yet would it not make those carolling angels weep
To think how incarnate Love
Means such trivial joys to us children of unbelief?'
No. It's a miracle great enough
If through centuries. clouded and dingy, this Day can keep Expectation alive.

"I see in the firelit room
a child is awake,
Mute with expectancy
For the berried day, the presents, the Christmas cake.
Is he mine? or me?"

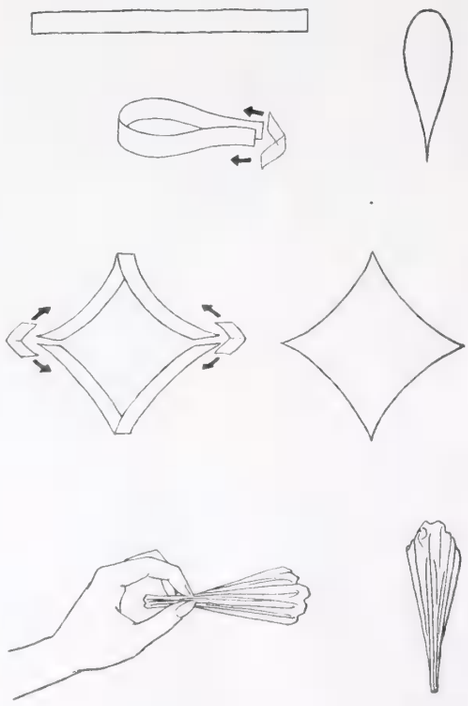
House Beautiful's "Jewel Clusters," like giant gems bezeled in rosy copper, are decorations you make yourself of foil and cellophane. They invite you to dream up countless patterns of your own. But first, see our design suggestions on these six pages

By ROXA WRIGHT

Peppermint-stripe wreath is a taping-together of 48 cellophane-filled loops.



Recapture the joys of your childhood Christmas by making it with your own hands

● "Jewel Clusters" were designed by HOUSE BEAUTIFUL to embellish your Christmas house with the rich gleam of precious stones and the dappled lights of stained-glass color. But, best of all, they re-open to you the creative excitement you felt as a child when the greatest fun of Christmas came from the trimmings and gifts you made with your own hands.

Our "Jewel Clusters" give you the chance to recapture that satisfying, heart-lifting joy in participation. They are easily made of loops or squares of springy, bendable, copper-color aluminum foil (not kitchen foil). The forms are filled with jewel-color cellophane, pleated or crushed to produce the sparkling effect of precious stones, then grouped to create the medallions, roundels, and fruits we suggest here. But by adding loops or strips you can easily improvise patterns of your own. The procedure is so foolproof you're bound to get stylish, finished results. Transparent plastic tape and colorless vinyl glue hold together these airy, almost weightless shapes, which are moisture-proof too, usable outdoors in sheltered places.

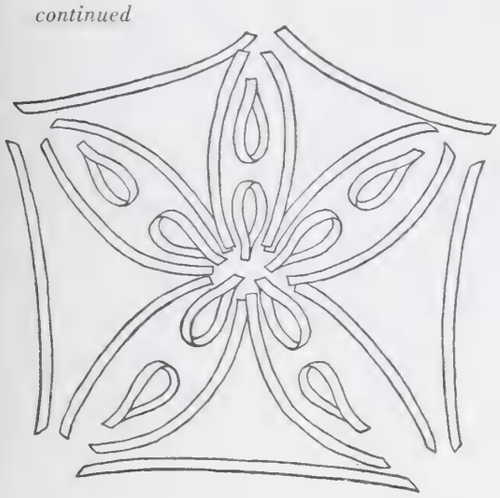
To make this even simpler, Hallmark Cards has assembled all necessary materials, measured and pre-cut, in an easy-to-work-with folio, shown on page 147.

"Jewel Clusters" are easy to make.

Aluminum strips in copper color make the "settings" for "Jewel Clusters." Basic component of most ornaments is the loop, simply made by bending a strip and taping its ends together. Foil holds any shape you give it. You can press loops into all sorts of forms — rounds, leaves, petals, fruits. Squares and starlike diamonds are made of two strips taped together and creased into angles. Jewel fillings are cellophane, pleated into fan shapes or crumpled, then glued into the foil forms. You can compose them in endless patterns.

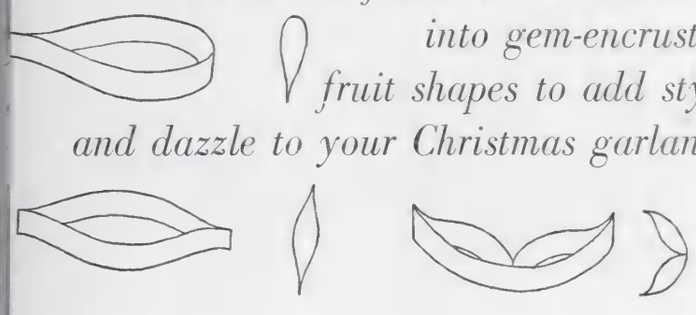
"Jewel Clusters" can be simple or sophisticated, depending upon their fillings and the number of elements you join together. In the windows of a country house fairy-tale flowers of candy stripes glitter nostalgically like Christmas barley sugar.

Stylized stars give a window wall the rich glow of stained glass. When sun streams through cellophane, a room gets a glorious bonus of jewel-tinted shadow pattern. Stars are foil squares pinched into acute angles, a fan of cellophane glued in each corner.

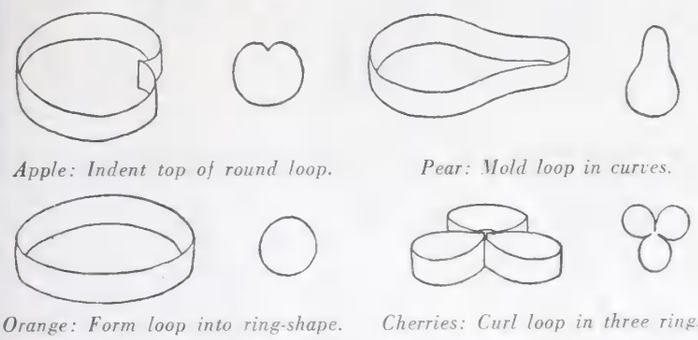


These fanciful blossoms of topaz and emerald show what varied effects you can get by filling the loops with sandwiches of different colored cellophane. All loops in our ornaments are made from 8-inch foil strips easily shaped into round, petal, or leaf forms.

FOUR PHOTOGRAPHS BY WESLEY BALZ



"Jewel Clusters" are as diverse as frost crystals. Opposite you get an inkling of the patterns it's possible to make of cellophane-filled foil loops—stars, flowers, rose-window medallions, quatrefoils, garlands. Sketch above shows how component parts can go together. Notice that petal shapes can be used in reverse with their sharp ends pointing outward. Strips of foil can frame and define compositions, like the leading in stained glass. Even the most complex are light enough to hang from nylon thread, or they can be glued directly to window with a dot of glue from the kit.



A cluster of jeweled fruits on a front door is as practical as it is sumptuous, for cellophane and aluminum foil are moisture-resistant. They're lightweight, so should be firmly attached and sheltered from wind.

You can form "Jewel Clusters" into gem-encrusted fruit shapes to add style and dazzle to your Christmas garlands Leaf: Pinch loop to a point. Two leaves: Pinch loop in half.

Apple: Indent top of round loop. Pear: Mold loop in curves.

Orange: Form loop into ring-shape. Cherries: Curl loop in three rings.

Fabulous fruits start with a foil loop. The bendable, springy foil takes any shape you give it. Jeweled garland at right is a mélange of oranges, pears, plums, apples, cherries, grapes, interspersed with leaves. Each fruit is formed separately, from a single 8″ foil strip. You can bend a single strip into two leaf shapes or three cherries or grapes, holding them in position with plastic tape. It's a good idea to experiment with the forms you want to make, tentatively holding them together with paper clips before taping them. Glue crinkled cellophane into each form, then tape fruits together in whatever composition pleases you.

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY WESLEY BALZ

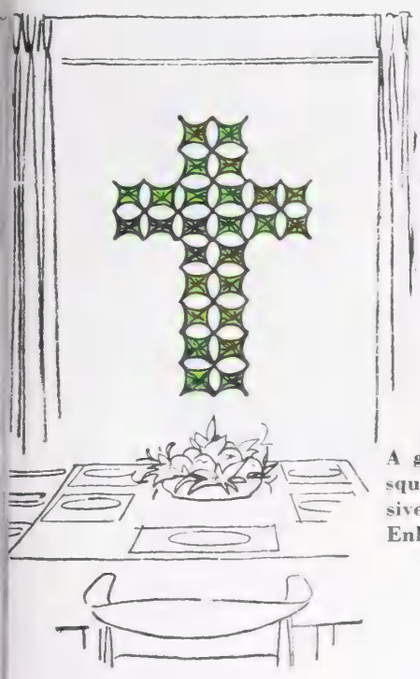
A drift of jewel blossoms across a glass wall is duplicated in rich shadow patterns on floor and walls. Like stained glass, cellophane casts colored shadow, so you need only a few ornaments, placed where light can shine through, to get magnificent and unusual decorative effects.

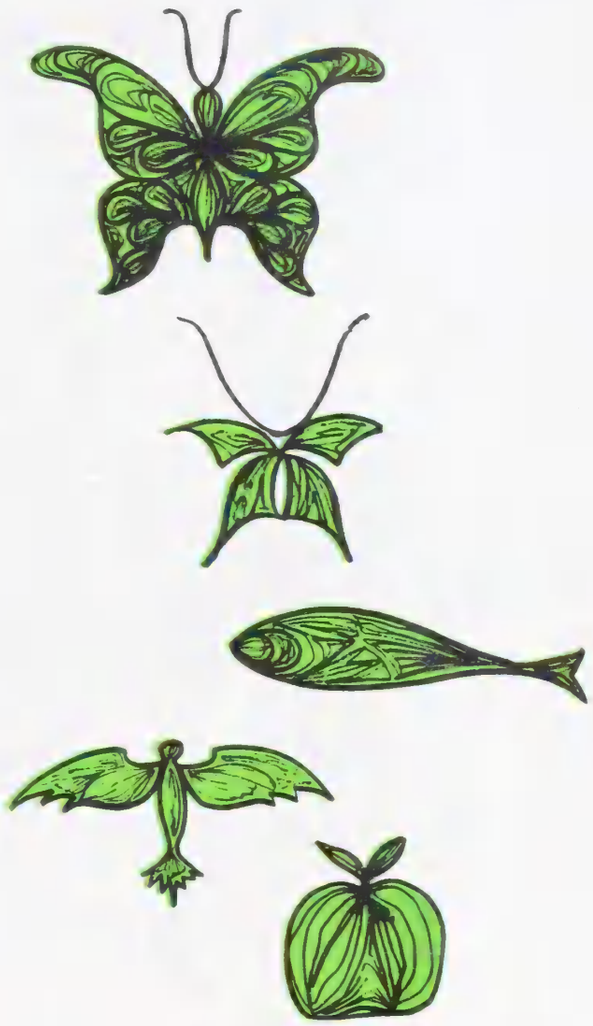
The light-filtering quality of cellophane works day and night, indoors and out. At the far right, light shining through the sidelights of this doorway gives occupants the enjoyment of jewel color by day; at right, when lights are lit at night, colors glow for passersby.

"Jewel Clusters" invite you to let your imagination go. You can improvise endless trimmings besides those we've shown



You can compose Gothic cartouches like these, improvising your own patterns with the diamond-shaped jewels on page 143.

You might have a jewel-flower tree on your window, like this pyramidal arrangement of 23 six-petaled, foil-loop blossoms.



Once you start working with the basic forms, they'll suggest patterns. The loop inspired this jeweled rainfall for a front door.

A geometric arrangement of 26 square jewels makes this impressive cross, 36" long, 24" wide. Enlarge it by adding squares.

DRAWINGS BY RICHARD WEST

A gemlike moth, a stained-glass apple, an iridescent fish —these suggest a few of the trimmings you might dream up for yourself. Heavy lines in these sketches represent foil frames. Even the extravagant-looking butterfly is nothing more complicated than an assembly of small, simple forms, made separately and taped together. Transparent plastic tape and colorless glue prevent joinings from showing. You can give jewel fillings subtle shadings or stained-glass effects by putting together layers of different color cellophane, or by sandwiching bits of different colors between two sheets—a good way to use clippings.

How to get the makings of "Jewel Clusters"

Hallmark Cards has assembled the materials for making House Beautiful's "Jewel Clusters," pre-cut and packaged in a folio that serves as a work kit. Plastic tape and glue are included, with diagrammatic instructions for making the ornaments shown here. Folio contains:

75 strips (2" x 8⅓") of aluminum metal foil, copper-tinted on one side, silver on the other.

125 sheets (4" x 8") of cellophane in 7 jewel colors.

1 roll (200") of ½" transparent plastic tape.

1 tube of Sobo colorless glue.

The folio, priced at $5, is available countrywide in many stores where Hallmark Cards are sold.

Vegetable print No. 4

● These magnificent, poster-size prints with a look of extravagance and a wonder-working ability to fill whole walls with impressive decoration are definite, within-your-budget candidates for this year's gift-giving. For example, $7 buys the unusual 17th-century French "Metier" print opposite, all 30″ x 40″ of it; $5 buys one of these Swedish botanical prints of vegetables. Reproductions, of course, but greatly enlarged and available only by mail order.

The print opposite is an authorized copy of an etching in the Cooper Union Museum, one of a series of eight historical novelties, made to show the costumes and tools of various metiers or trades. We show you the complete set on page 210. Swedish botanical books gave us the almost photographically precise drawings and faithful colorings of the vegetable prints. See two more on page 210.

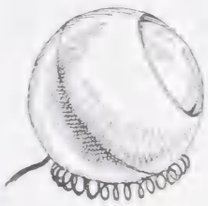
Make Christmas your chance to learn about Mood Lighting

● Theatrical lighting is a powerful art, as emotionally stirring as music, poetry, or painting.

You'll be amazed at the magic you can perform at home with dramatic lighting. You can transform an ordinary room into an enchanted wonderland with light and shadow patterns. So, while you're in the throes of holiday decorating, try your hand at the glamour of mood lighting. It will give an exhilarating lift and a fresh aspect to the most familiar room or garden.

You don't need an electrician or complicated equipment. An inexpensive spotlight is all it takes. By uplighting a plant or bough, or even your Christmas tree, you'll be able to project big scale, fantastic patterns over the walls or splash a bold decoration across the ceiling.

This glorious richness of projected shadows can elevate one plant or an arrangement of branches so it becomes a decoration of big importance. Like painting with shadows, you can move around with the spotlight, coming in close or backing away, until you find the most effective play of silhouettes. For just the right intensity you can add a dimmer control or experiment with bulbs of different wattages.



Outdoors, the same spotlighting will bring fairyland mystery to your garden. Uplighting the branches of a picturesque tree or bush will bring it forward as a sculptural feature. Or you can cast fabulous dappled patterns of natural forms across walls or pavings.

You'll have a lot of fun for very little money with the astonishing effects of dramatic lighting indoors and out. And in the lighthearted pursuit of temporary decorating you'll gain practice and experience in how to make your home more glamorous the year round.

One spotlight at the floor makes spectacular decoration from one bouquet in a crystal globe by projecting the beauty of cedar boughs and gold stars in a glorious splash of shadow patterns across the wall and ceiling.

How to bring the Wassail Bowl up to date

By RUTH P. COLLINS

● Whiffs from a wassail bowl's hot, spicy fragrance wafting through cracks of doors and even penetrating walls, so some people say, have pulled Christmas callers in to hospitable hearths for a very long time.

For fifteen hundred years now Wass Hael or Good Health, said to the clinking of glasses or mugs, has been the toast of English-speaking people.

All through the centuries the wassail brew has been quite simple to make. It requires only ale, cider (hard or mild), roasted apples, spices, lemons, sugar, and sometimes eggs. Toasted bread was originally used as a part of the wassail ceremony, but it has been dropped from the recipe during its long evolution. Traditionally, toast figured in the ritual of villagers who carried a holly-decked bowl out to the apple orchards. The toast was tossed up to the apple trees, and the brew was poured on their roots to invoke a plentiful supply of fruit for next season's ale.

The Briton's taste for the original wassail brew hasn't changed much, either, through all these years. He still drinks his wassail brews under the old 16th-century names of Yard of Flannel (or Lamb's Wool because of its smooth, creamy texture), Farmer's Bishop, and a concoction beloved by the ancient abbots, called Hot Purl. (See recipes for making all three of these drinks on page 209.)

Old English taverns still depend upon the tantalizing whiffs from such drinks to pull customers by the noses through their swinging doors.

Today in the home during the Christmas season the wassail brew is served callers who drop in to drink a toast, or come and go for open-house. (On page 209 you will find recipes for serving as many as 50 expected guests for open-house.)

A wassail bowl cup is also a good drink to serve to friends who bring you gifts; to carolers singing from house to house who would welcome being invited to come in out of the cold when they reach yours. (Please turn to page 209)

One of the Oldest, Most Popular Wassail Bowls

6 cups ale
½ bottle dry sherry
1 cup cube sugar
2 lemons
½ teaspoon ground ginger
½ teaspoon grated nutmeg
¼ teaspoon cinnamon
6 small unpeeled roasted apples

Mix spices and sugar with 2 cups of ale, and boil mixture for a minute, stirring well. Add rest of ale and sherry. Allow mixture to come to boiling point, then pour into wassail bowl. Add three or four more lumps of sugar which have been well-rubbed on lemon-skin. Add the apples, well-roasted and piping hot from the fire, and a few wedges of lemon. Serve hot.

Christmas trees that never grew

On the following pages are three Christmas trees you can make or assemble, each the equivalent of a costly custom-made tree. The one you see across the page is a bountiful all-fruit tree. Another is a plywood shelf-tree for displaying gifts, before and after they're opened. An aluminum tree, shimmering with silver branches, is the third. Each one provides a stylish new way to decorate your home with an additional tree, which can be packed, put away and used again and again

You can make this pineapple, one of the many fruits on the tree across the page, by pasting together four paper parts —three sides and base. Paper-cut details suggest prickly points, spurs, leaves. You can paint all these fruits with almost any paint: a water-based wall paint, casein, or a house or a spray paint.

To make this pomegranate or any round fruit, use Styrofoam ball. Where fruit is large, coat first with glue-soaked paper strips before you paint it. This provides a smoother surface for the stripes, dots, dashes you want to add.

Paste one front and two sides of paper together and you have a banana. Six or seven joined together at one end with cement add up to a bunch. Paint the bananas a yellow-gold color, and run some realistic green stripes down the sides of each.

A fabulous fruit tree that the family can make

● When you make a fruit tree, like the one we show on the opposite page, you create a Christmas tree that is stylishly new, but old in tradition. Unblemished fruits, picked at their climax of perfection and heaped in over-flowing piles before ancient altars, were among mankind's earliest votive offerings. This exuberant symbol was used also for exalting the nativity and reached its artistic peak during the Italian Renaissance when the great masters adorned their canvases and friezes with garlands of glowing fruits.

This fruit tree, created by Interior Designer Maurice Bailey, is a simply made, half-round structure of wood and chicken wire, nailed securely to a wooden box or tub, and hung with imaginary fruit, some whole, some cut in wedges, luscious-looking enough to eat. You can make this tree yourself. If there are little helpers

(Please turn to page 204)

To make the tempting-looking wedges, like the orange sections shown, cut halves and quarters out of Styrofoam balls. Paint fruit seeds to make wedges look real.

For a Christmas buffet table, make a life-size, half-round tree, laden with exotic fruits, some whole, some cut in luscious-looking wedges. Styrofoam balls, paper, paint make the fruit; glycerined leaves and dried wheat heads, the foliage. Add artificial grapes from the dime store.

A gift-shelf tree you can use all through the holiday season.
Make it yourself from our blueprint or have it made for you

● Here's a new way to show off your pretty packages before the great day, and to display the presents after they've been opened, or to have a continuous holiday buffet for all your drop-in guests. It's a six-foot giant of a wood tree with five circular shelves to hold all sizes and shapes. Best of all, it comes apart and can be stored, off-season, in a modest amount of space. It's the kind of useful year-to-year holiday accessory that can easily become a family tradition.

COLOR PHOTOGRAPH BY VINCENT LISANTI

If there is a woodworker in the family, making the tree from our blueprint will be easy. The big job is cutting the tree frame out of a large sheet of ½″ plywood. This is best done on a band saw or with a portable electric saber saw. It would be difficult to cut on all but the largest-throated jig saws, and doing it by hand would be terribly tedious. A beginner should let a carpenter or lumber yard do the cutting (a job costing from $15 to $30). Assembling the tree is not hard. The shelves are simple circles of either hardboard or ¼″ plywood. After the four frame pieces have been hinged together, the shelves are laid in place and finial-topped cleats inserted to steady the tree.

How to order a blueprint

A blueprint of the gift-shelf tree, showing the design of the tree frame and giving complete instructions for making and assembling the tree, is available for $1.25. Send check or money order with your name and address to Blueprint Co., Dept. HB, 101 Park Avenue, New York, N. Y.

These are the components of our gift-shelf tree: four tree-shaped frames, hinged together at three points; five circular shelves, cut to fit loosely into the tree frame; two finial-topped cleats to lock the frame in place. You can see how neatly the parts would fold and stack for compact off-season storage.

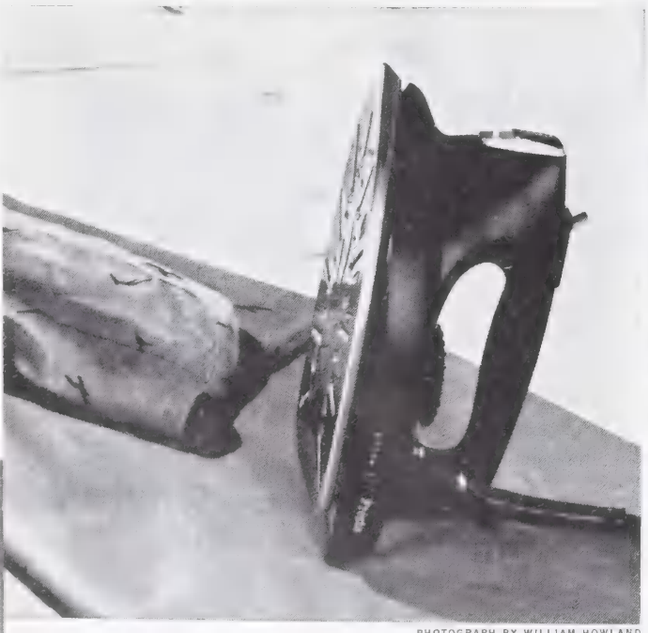
This seven-foot tree with its twisted and curled aluminum branches glistens in the least light, needs few decorations. The sapphire tree, about $60. Smaller sizes start at $25. At department stores.

This shimmering aluminum tree can be used indoors and out, serves as a foil for special decorations



No one would deny the place of the traditional evergreen tree with its nostalgic scent and its thick foliage to fill with tinsel and candy canes. This is really Christmas for many of us. But today the carefully designed artificial tree may be so handsome that there should be a place for it too. The one we show above is a seven-foot aluminum tree with more than 200 branches that are stuck into pre-drilled holes in a silver pole (20 minutes' work). It could well be the second tree—on a covered terrace, to add style to a living room when the traditional tree is in the family room, or, in smaller size, to decorate a hall, bedroom, or dining room. Its uniform glistening branches make a wonderful background for special single-color decorations (ours are Swedish wood birds) or for the kind of mood lighting described on page 151. Like the other "trees that never grew," this one can be packed neatly away in its original carton, to be brought out for use again another year.

This revolutionary electric floor-washer is one of those liberators from drudgery that women used to dream of. It's a high spot in the cleaning developments of the past 12 months. As easy to operate as the vacuum, you just flick the control levers and push it across the floor. It dispenses clean water and detergent, scrubs the floor and then vacuums up the dirty water, depositing it in a separate container inside. The floor is left spanking clean and dry, and you haven't even had to wet your hands. Electric Floor Washer, $80. Hoover Company.

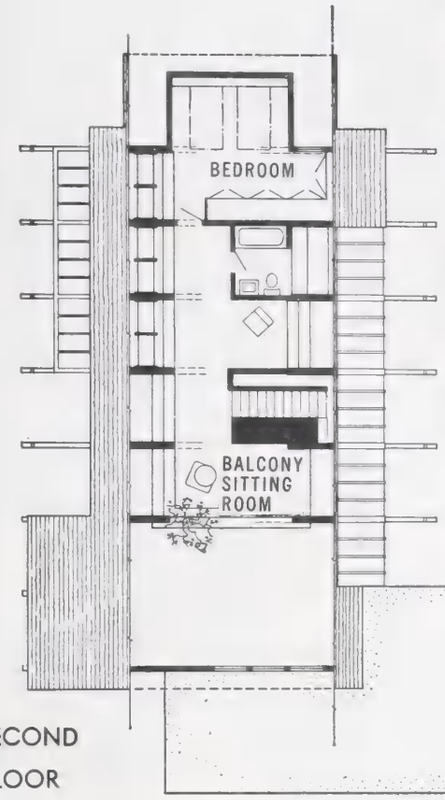
For Cathedral Space Consider the A-frame

By JOHN DEKOVEN HILL

● Perhaps because we live a horizontal life, parallel to the earth's surface, an invitation to look upward along continuously ascending lines has a psychological effect that is heart-lifting and exhilarating.

Lofty soaring space will inevitably free your spirit to soar. In a great Gothic cathedral or under a grove of stately elms the continuing movement upward and upward to a final delicate meeting far overhead provokes this release of the spirit, a sense of expansive optimism. These forms are stimulating because the sweeping vertical lines terminate easily, at rest against each other. There is no lid pressing down, no obviously heavy overhead slab confining the space below.



Bigness is not necessary. The same effect can be achieved at any scale appropriate to the need—vast for a big public congregation or intimate and personal for home life.

One of the simplest forms of wood framing is used in this house to create its atmosphere of lofty airiness. It is not large, and the construction is simple. Yet it is an intricately-fascinating example of how a structural form can instill a sense of well-being and raise (Please turn to page 212)

AT CHRISTMAS

Serve foods that nobody else will serve

If there was ever proof that it doesn't pay to run with the crowd, it is in the food department of life. Every year, at the holidays, it is proved anew that sameness accomplishes nothing but to bore.

Every year, in the period between December 20 and January 2, those of us who lead any social life at all eat eight to twelve meals in which ham or turkey (or both, if it is a buffet) is the featured dish. As a result, by the end of the holiday season we can hardly look at ham and turkey, and the revulsion lasts for weeks or months. And two perfectly nice foods have been down-graded by sheer monotony.

House Beautiful suggests that, this year, you try a policy which deliberately sets out to avoid what everybody else is probably going to serve when they are entertaining. Leave the seasonal clichés to others—in the party department. Serve roast turkey at the private family dinner, if the children feel it is not Christmas without drumsticks. But where outsiders are to be invited in, play it some other way.

Our suggestions for some "other way" are to try some of the famous, classic peasant foods of Europe. This is a big, wonderful area of gastronomy and it is much neglected—all the publicity and food writing tending to lean to the haute cuisine side of things. Peasant foods are ideal in winter, for they are hearty, zesty, and full of interest.

We turned to "The Brasserie"—a very good new restaurant in the Seagram Building in New York patterned after the fine French type of restaurant called relais (comparable to the Hotel Plaza Athenée's Relais in Paris)—for eight great peasant dishes, converted to (Please turn to page 214)

Serve a mouth-watering Quiche Lorraine, a main-course pie made of eggs, Gruyère cheese and bacon. Small, individual ones can be a first course or a cocktail accompaniment, or a big one can be a main course coupled with a tossed green salad and crusty French bread. Deserves to be in every cook's repertoire.

BLINIS: Using black caviar as filling, turn old-fashioned buckwheat pancakes into those famous tangy-tasting blinis that make gourmets smack their lips. Garnish with sour cream.

AVOCADOS: Their mild creaminess begs for salty red caviar to step up flavor. Fill avocado halves with jellied consommé, top with two tablespoons caviar and a dollop of sour cream.

FISH ROLLS: Caviar, used to season smoked fish, heightens its ocean-salt taste. For a colorful dish, roll black caviar in slices of smoked salmon, red caviar in sturgeon slices.

Use Caviar as a seasoning

Thanks to its slightly-fishy, salty taste, caviar can be a great garnish or a seasoning for mild, delicate foods

By EPSIE KINARD

● The reason you can so successfully wed mild delicate foods (like sea food, turkey, avocadoes, artichokes, cottage cheese, sour cream and egg) to the zestier caviar flavor is that they make up for each other's shortcomings, always the basis of a happy relationship. Caviar's salty, fishy taste is subdued, but still positive. The nearly "no-taste" of mild food can become piquant and tantalizing when garnished with a teaspoon or tablespoon of those delectable fish eggs.

Since you can buy caviar in one- two- four- and eight-ounce jars at many supermarkets, it pays to keep some on hand at all times so you can whip up a gala dish for unexpected guests. Try some of the recipes illustrated here and you'll come to believe that a tiny one-ounce jar is more eligible to be called black magic than caviar.

Imported caviar, vacuum-packed, comes from the same Caspian Sea catches of sturgeon roe as the fresh. (All of it has to be cured with salt.) For a long pantry-shelf life, the vacuum-packed, saltier than the fresh, is pasteurized by American importers and packers who heat the caviar in jars in water.

If you are truly a caviar lover, get the fresh and eat it straight—for those great occasions in your life. If you can't get it in your town, you can order it shipped in sawdust and wet ice by air parcel post or express at a cost of around $38 per pound, plus shipping charges. But if you think the fresh costs too much or you don't like to eat it au naturel, you can get a good imported caviar for as little as 79*c* an ounce, vacuum-packed, which is quite acceptable for garnishing.

Of the 65 tons of caviar consumed by Americans last year, only 25 per cent of it was fresh. Seventy-five per cent was the vacuum-packed. These statistics are not only proof of our ample era, but of the spreading popularity of a food which two decades ago was eaten mostly by the so-called "elite."

For improving the taste of bland, pale-tasting foods, red "caviar" surpasses the black. Paradoxically, red caviar is not caviar technically. Precisely speaking, it is salmon roe. Only the dark caviar, the egg of the sturgeon, can be accurately called caviar, according to the Food and Drug Administration. There are three kinds coming from three species of sturgeon: The most valuable is the giant gray grain beluga. Osetra, from the egg of the next largest sturgeon and said to be Soviet Premier Nikita Khrushchev's favorite, is another kind of caviar, but it is not very abundant in this country. The smallest grain is from the sevruga sturgeon.

People who really know caviar say, "Beluga is for the gourmet who eats with his eyes; the sevruga, smaller-grained and 30 to 40 per cent cheaper, is for the real connoisseur who eats with his palate."

In buying caviar you will find that different packers use different designations for their processing (see our explanation of the terms below). Check the container you buy to see whether or not it needs refrigeration.

Any person learning to like caviar, like one learning to like oysters or olives, acquires the taste faster if the caviar is natural pressed and is used as a garnish for familiar foods.

Since it's made from very ripe roe and therefore too soft to be prepared as grain caviar, the pressed has an excellent flavor because the roe becomes sweeter as it ripens, as a peach or a banana sweetens as it reaches its peak. Also since the grains are pressed, very little

(Please turn to page 189)

A Dictionary of Caviars

Fresh caviar applies usually to choice, firm, not-too-ripe whole eggs of three sturgeon species, yielding roe of three sizes: beluga (giant grain), osetra (medium-size), sevruga (smallest). Low in salt, it must be iced.

Pressed caviar: When sturgeon eggs are too ripe to be preserved whole, they are pressed. This type needs refrigeration when bought "fresh" from a keg or in lightly-sterilized jars, but not when vacuum-packed for pantry shelf.

Special pressed or "Sandwich Caviar," less ripe than the type above, is as densely pressed but thinned by returning some of the drained oil. It is packed in vacuum-sealed jars.

Vacuum-packed caviar: More heavily salted than fresh caviar, the vacuum-packed uses less ripe grades. It is given long shelf life by in-the-jar sterilizing. It includes both of the pressed caviars, the whole-grain Caspian Sea caviars, and the whole-grain Great Lakes and Canadian caviar. The vacuum-packed caviar also includes the whole-grain varieties of the so-called "caviars" such as the roe of red salmon, lumpfish, and whitefish.

Other fresh caviars: Great Lakes and Canadian caviars and red salmon "caviar" are also available fresh.

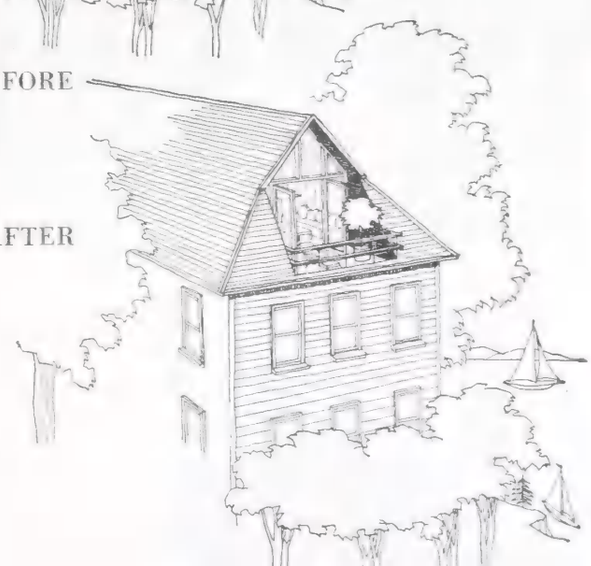
Give yourself THE present: a better place to live

● When the January first bills come in each year, most of us have to face up to the hard fact that we have frittered away a lot of money during the holiday season. And we tell ourselves that next year we will do things differently—that in the next ten or eleven months we will evolve a plan to save ourselves from that splurge of impulse buying that runs rampant at Christmas time.

The best way, we have observed, to save yourself from random impulse buying is to have a counter plan for some worth-while project that will importantly improve your way of life. Let it be a project the whole family can use and enjoy, like a new terrace, a week-end house in the mountains or at the beach. It might be a trip to Europe for the whole family, a new kitchen, or a complete refurnishing of the living room.



During the month of December, work out the details of the project, so that by Christmas day the project will be in some more tangible form than a vague dream. Big worth-while projects need professional planning, so retain the architect or decorator or landscape architect and ask for rough sketches to be ready by Christmas Eve for presentation to the family. These ten pages contain examples to trigger your planning.

Turn the attic into high class living space.
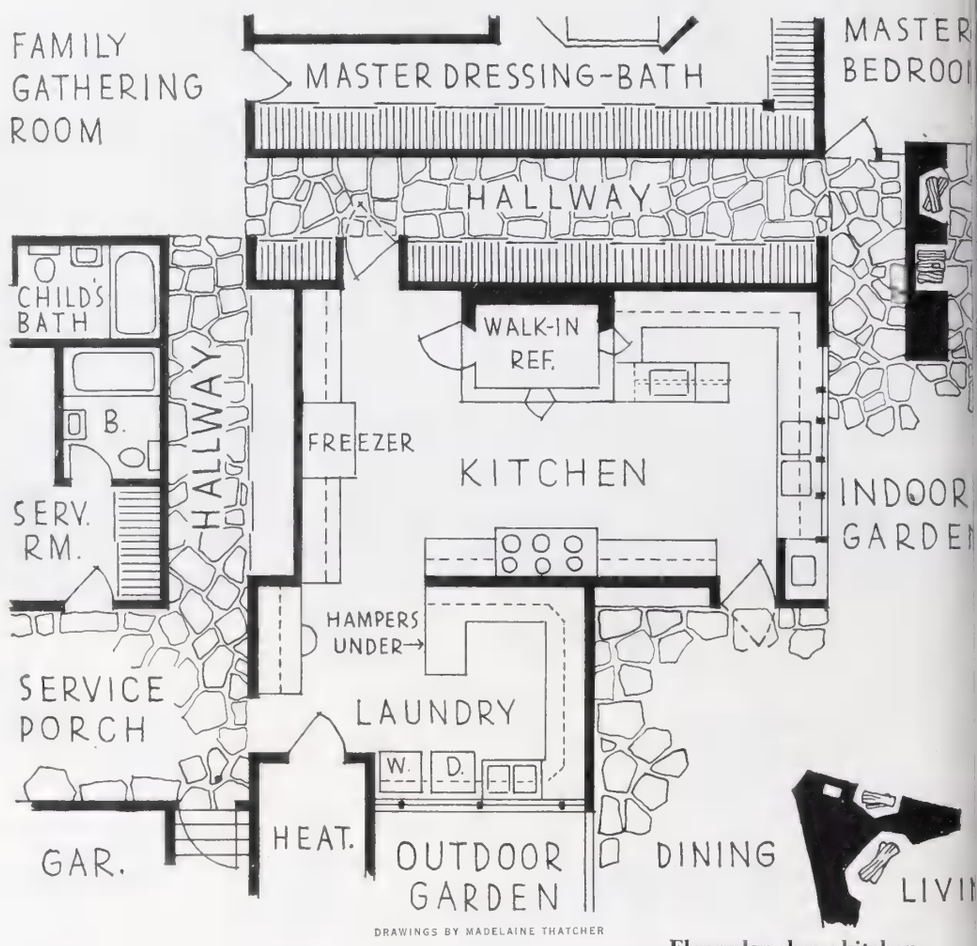
Most older houses have this kind of hidden space waiting to be knowingly developed

Converting the dark, hot attic into something livable is no new thing. But we have never seen the problem tackled except in a limited way, with the results giving a limited improvement. Consider the situation pictured here: a conventionally-pitched hip roof into which is indented a loggia or balcony. The room opening to this balcony has been entirely glazed and then completely shuttered. The condition so created is ideal, to say nothing of romantic.



This kitchen and family room have several great ideas worth being noted by remodelers. They belong to a family with six children

Inside and outside of the large family room are seen in this pair of pictures. It is adjacent to the kitchen. (See plan at right.) Clerestory motif repeats again.

Below you see the hallway dividing the kitchen from the rest of the house, and the long run of high windows occurring above the ceiling height of the adjoining room. This is a splendid way to obtain outside light from directions that are not outside exposures, frequently a crucial problem when a new addition is to be made to an existing structure. Obviously figuring out the roof handling would have to be left in the hands of an architect.

DRAWINGS BY MADELAINE THATCHER

Floor plan shows kitchen in relation to rest of house. Note good traffic handling. Kitchen can be entirely by-passed by hallways, has three entrances, marvelous counter space. All walls give maximum storage performance, thanks to absence of windows.

Laundry, at left, is actually part of the kitchen but work area is out of the traffic pattern, so floor could be kept clean enough for safe ironing of long or big things (like sheets). Clothes hampers are part of counter construction.

Even though this kitchen is not a remodeled one, but a new one, it is loaded with meaning for a family thinking of adding a new kitchen to an existing house.

Most meaningful aspect of the kitchen is the way light has been brought in from above through high clerestory windows. This could be done at the point where a new room was to be added to an existing house, creating outside light even though most of the connecting wall is to be used for other purposes (such as storage cabinets). No conventional windows exist, yet this kitchen gets outdoor light from all four directions—high, sky light which is the most agreeable light there is.

In a kitchen, where you want maximum use of the walls for work purposes, this principle offers good efficiency.

Also note the walk-in refrigerator, with two small doors on two of its sides and a door on the third side. For a large family this could facilitate buying foods by the case or the lug.

Main view of the kitchen, the vegetable wash-up area, two of the small doors of the walk-in refigerator, and the cooking area. Above it all you see two long runs of high clerestory windows. These are not in the kitchen proper, but across the hallways, to be seen in the plan. House is air-conditioned.

● Remodeling is the present that never sits on the shelf after it is opened, never has to be taken back to the store to be exchanged. On these two pages is a Christmas project that could change the life of an out-of-date house. Running a household from this smoothly operating kitchen-living room would be like opening a newly wrapped package every day.

Before remodeling, the house had a butler's-pantry kitchen typical of so many older houses (plan at far left). In opening up the wall to the living room, the owners wisely retained more than one-third of it as a baffle against the food preparation, cooking, and clean-up section of the working kitchen. The wall between the butler's pantry and the kitchen was cut down to make a bar and serving counter. It hides a second sink that is set at a lower level behind it. Give yourselves, as a family, the highly rewarding project of turning a rarely used "catch-all" into a room for the family's constant enjoyment

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY WILLIAM HOWLAND

● Is one of your rooms a gloomy, semi-wasted parking place for leftover furnishings and odds and ends of family memorabilia—a room that always has you apologizing for it?

If you as a family pooled all the little sums you'd spend on trinkets for each other, you could revamp such a room into an inviting center for entertainment, reading, games or whatever interests and hobbies you enjoy as a group. You'd be giving yourselves a lasting source of pleasure, a climate for a closer family relationship.

As an encouraging example, we show how Mr. and Mrs. Peter Grimm of New York turned a dark "catch-all" apartment-house room into a library and entertainment center. Their purpose was to brighten the room and bring uncluttered compatibility to TV and record-playing equipment and a collection of books, prints, documents, and Mr. Grimm's decorations from foreign governments. The room was refurnished, but note that the major transformation depends upon built-in cabinets and shelves and an ingenious window treatment. Margaret S. Taylor was the interior designer.

BEFORE

If you have a catch-all room, take a fresh look at its wall space. A few built-ins and shelves might be all that's needed to co-ordinate the room and provide orderly storage space to display or hide the miscellany that now has such a cluttered look.

Making the out-of-doors play a part in your indoor life gives you the everyday gift of Nature

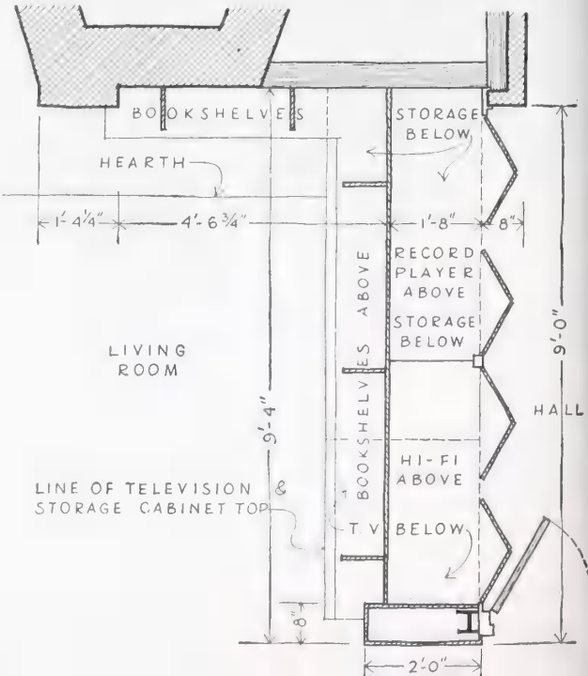
The changes that were made in this corner room were not great, but there is a world of difference in the feeling created. At top, before remodeling, there was the usual sense of being in and looking out, even though there were sizable windows and double doors. After all the windows were cut out to the floor (no structural problem), see how much the presence of Nature is felt throughout the room (large photograph). The glass wall lets you see the shrubs and trees right down to the ground, as if you could walk directly out to them. This kind of participation is suitable for all climates, since there is so much to be enjoyed, even in a winter scene. Left, you see the effect of remodeling on exterior. Planting was arranged with new windows in mind. Remodeling, decorating, Schneider-Garnier.

New terrace fills the space formed by the L-shaped house. Made of bricks laid in sand, it is carefully edged to make mowing along it easy. All trees are underplanted in pockets left open. Young tree in foreground has large bed of ivy underneath to protect it from playing children. Size of terrace can be judged by the fact that three furniture groups fit easily into the space.

Useful space for outdoor living may be the only thing needed to bring a house up to date



Many a house works well on the inside but has no outdoor room on a modern scale. In such a situation, the addition of a large level paved area can be the most important remodeling project. The new terrace in these photographs is large enough for all present and future needs, is accessible directly from two areas of the house, and is on a level with the main living floor. Though existing trees gave substantial shade, a young magnolia, underplanted with ivy, was added. Home of Mr. and Mrs. Wilson W. Carter, Jr.; Arthur Berger, landscape consultant.

This area used to be in lawn, but poor lawn because it was so shady. Plenty of grass area for children's hard playing is left (see the equipment in the background). The owners thus saved the maintenance of a difficult space while they gained a big room for outdoor living.

How to make TV take its place in a room

By CAROLYN S. MURRAY

● Television is a routine part of daily living and deserves to look as if it belonged in a room. But it is a particularly bulky piece of furniture to cope with. The bigger the screen the bulkier the total mass. Solving the problem architecturally is the best way, but a good installation requires thought. The set must be handy, yet unobtrusive: the installation must allow for ventilation (and for possible future changes), yet not be so large that it overpowers other forms in the room. On these pages and the next two are five examples of built-in television that is integrated into its surroundings so that it is almost part of the architecture. In some cases the result is achieved by simple cabinetry detailing. In others, the solution is more complex, involving other architectural features in the room. Often the housing of the TV set is combined with a storage wall that has room for other living room equipment: hi-fi, records, games, and card tables. (Please turn the page)

THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Hide its bulk in a room divider

The storage wall shown on these two pages is roughly 2′6″ deep and screens the living room from the entrance hall in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tenenbaum. Its folding doors give no clue to the large, odd-size equipment hidden behind them. When the right-hand doors are open, the television can be viewed from the couch opposite (far left photo). The cabinets and bookshelves were designed by the architects, Bernoudy-Mutrux-Bauer, as were set of tables in center of room.

From the hall side of the partition wall (left), folding doors open to all kinds of storage. Only the TV runs the full depth of the wall (see its plywood backing in the left-hand section). Other compartments are half the depth, holding hi-fi and records on this side, books on the living-room wall. Card tables take three-quarter depth, leaving space for small storage on room side.

Make a small TV set part of a sweep of low cabinets that merge into one long line

When the TV set is small, or where tall cabinets would overpower a room, components can be lined up horizontally. Here, the solution results in two steps. The upper one is made by a row of small components, with the TV covered by a flip-back lid. The lower step grows out of the hearth (right) and serves as a place to sit while arranging records or selecting channels. Though small in scale, the grouping is solid and important-looking because it is integrated into the architecture. Room by Schneider-Garnier, decorators.

Garage a rolling TV table behind cabinet doors

The right-hand cabinet here has no base; a TV table or console can roll right into the empty space without being lifted. A TV garage is useful when the seating in a room is not arranged around the set. Right-hand cabinet extends a few inches more than hi-fi cabinet on left to allow for TV's added bulk. Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Scharff home. Bernoudy, Mutrux and Bauer were the architects.

Detail cabinet to match woodwork in the rest of the room

In a small room such as a bedroom, a large TV cabinet stands out like a lump. But here the molding around its housing relates it visually to the lighting cove above that encircles the room. Blanket cabinet and TV are unified by similar wood and hardware and by the molding on the cabinet's shelf light, installed at the same level as the molding on TV. Television can be watched from either bed (right). Home of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tenenbaum. Bernoudy, Mutrux and Bauer, architects.

Let TV fill an unneeded doorway

As in the case with many older houses, the room below had too many doors. Blocking one door in a diagonal manner and putting the TV in this empty triangular corner made good use of the space and put the screen at a comfortable viewing angle for all points in the room. Matching cabinets further integrate corner. William Schneider home. Schneider-Garnier, decorators.

Two great books to give gardeners

● On rare and notable occasion, there comes into print a book of such excellence in its field that it creates a standard by which all others of its kind will be judged. We are fortunate to have, at this holiday season, two new books that can rightly be called classics. One of them, Exotica 2, is a full pictorial encyclopedia of tropicals and house plants by Alfred Byrd Graf. The other is a loving compilation of choice selections from the world's literature on plants and gardening collected by Joseph Wood Krutch.

Exotica 2 is the reflection of a man's lifelong dedication to his subject. Mr. Graf has worked at horticulture since childhood. He has traveled the world collecting tropical plants and gathering the material that was to become Exotica. For 30 years he has been associated with Julius Roehrs Co., in New Jersey, one of America's largest and oldest growers of plants for indoor use. His first encyclopedia, Exotica 1, was sold out in a matter of months. It was decided to add 500 pages to the book and call it Exotica 2. The statistics of this masterwork are staggering: 1,146 pages, 7,000 photographs (231 in color), 466 drawings and charts, 237 other illustrations, and 3 maps. The book is exactly what it is called—a pictorial encyclopedia. It includes a photograph of every one of the 6,900 plants mentioned. The pictures are arranged alphabetically and grouped by families—which are also alphabetical. A listing of all the scientific names, and also the common names, make it easy to find a (Please turn to page 197)

Decorator's Diary

From pages of a decorator's notebook, musings on two special problems

"They call it three and a half rooms," said Mrs. Barnard speaking of her new apartment with a keen edge of hysteria in her voice, "but that half room is as big as a ballroom. When I saw it on the floor plan it looked like a cozy little foyer, just large enough for a mirror and a bench. Now I'm going to have to buy more furniture, which is exactly what I don't want to do."

I hurried over to see what this was all about, wishing that people would let their decorators in on their problems earlier in the game. It turned out that the Barnards had been looking forward to the apartment as their retirement-age refuge from the upkeep and headaches of a 14-room house and all its furnishings. With their family grown and moved away, they had sold off practically everything except their bedroom furniture and a few choice living room pieces. I noted a Sheraton sofa, an antique black lacquer breakfront that displays Mr. Barnard's collection of ivory on top and can hold tableware in its cabinets, a dropleaf table usable for dining, and some Japanned chairs that look like Chinese Chippendale to me.

Mrs. Barnard is of that gentler generation that went in for bona fide 18th-century furniture, semi-faded English chintzes, and Lowestoft. But she's a brisk woman who recognizes the necessity of change and had already been planning to update her background with more modern colors and fabrics.

The foyer was really no ballroom. It measured 12′ x 7′ to be precise, and was tantamount to an alcove in the living room, but it did look like a yawning hole of emptiness, especially when you looked into its long blank wall from the living room.

"The obvious thing would be to turn this into a dining room with the drop-leaf table and a few Chippendale chairs lined up against the wall. But my lovely furniture looks so lost that way, and the whole space seems so characterless."

"Nothing builds character like wallpaper," I said, brightly, because a great idea had suddenly flashed through my head. "One wonderful mural can furnish this foyer—and I know exactly where to find it."

I had in mind a wall-filling mural, 11′ 8″ long by 10′ high, handmade in Japan for Kneedler-Fauchére after a design by Tom Roberts. It's a rich, serene, almost life-size scene of four Japanese ladies in a mist of gold and antique white, their costumes highlighted with colors of black copper, bronze, and oxydized silver. It has all the shibui, or restraint, of a Japanese print and yet covers the wall as opulently as metal leaf. In fact, one of the secrets of its richness is that metal leaf is actually mixed with the pigments used in the printing. It is called "Ladies in the Fog," and fills the foyer's long wall so impressively, like an antique screen, that we wouldn't dream of putting furniture against it, although the foyer has become the dining room. We have covered its remaining walls and the living room walls in a paper that matches the background of the mural.

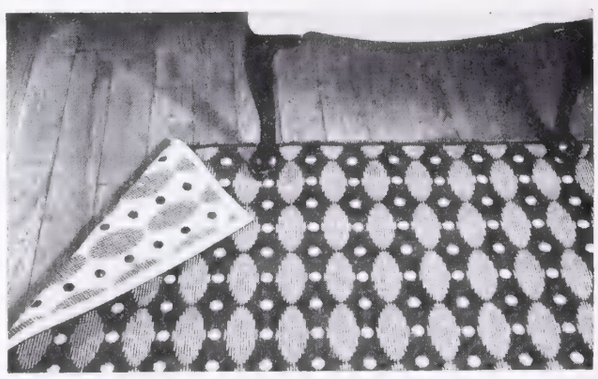
The mural can be specially ordered in other sizes and color schemes, but this version so pleased Mrs. Barnard and went so beautifully with her furniture and its oriental overtones that she wouldn't even discuss another choice. We borrowed its copper and silvery gray colors for the upholstery and pulled the foyer and living room together with chrysanthemum leaf carpeting.

Oh, to be young again, with a soaring imagination and a complete unawareness of the prices of things! For preconceived notions of cost can put a damper on originality and make people settle for dullness.



My innocent young friend, Lois Clement, who really spends most of her time admiring her engagement ring, called in a high pitch of ecstasy, to report the great bargain she and Bill had found in a one-room apartment. "It's a tremendous place," she cried, "and almost a duplex, with a little stairway going down into the living room from the hall. What would you think of carpeting the whole business, wall-to-wall, in the same color—something smart, say, like a gray and white stripe, because that would look terrific with the teak woods and the oxford gray and tangerine you suggested for my Danish sofa."

"I would think it was a fine idea," I said, "if the kind of carpet you're thinking of wasn't a custom order proposition—and if you could pay for the installation—and if it was really a smart move to invest in a big slather of carpeting for a temporary apartment. The facts of life are that you simply can't afford it."

But I wasn't being as callous a balloon-buster as I sounded. For suddenly I had an inspiration which was fired by a rug I'd lately seen at F. Schumacher's. It's one of what they call their "Elsinore" collection of flat-weave woolen rugs. They're machine-made in Denmark but you'd swear they were hand-loomed, for they are modern versions of handcrafted rugs that used to be made during the long winter nights in the old manor houses and parsonages of the Danish countryside. They're as tough as the Scandinavian sheep that furnish the wool they're made of, and come in three pleasantly usable geometric patterns which are neither strictly modern nor traditional so they'll veer any decoration direction you want them to. They are also reversible, which means that they have built-in possibilities for varying the looks of a room now or for creating a different effect if you move into new quarters. They are also surprisingly inexpensive.

What gave me the great idea for the Clements' apartment was that they come in six sizes, from a 2'22" x 4' scatter rug to a room-size rug, 9'10" x 15'2". A 5' x 7'6" rug in the foyer, and two 9' x 12' rugs in the living room would cover the major areas. By stitching together two small scatter rugs and running them down the steps, we could tie together the two areas and — voilà — we'd get the champagne effect of wall-to-wall carpeting on the Clements' beer budget.

Lois, entranced by this early lesson in how to get what you want when you can't really afford it, decided on the pattern of dots and ovals, in a weave of white on black —a lot of pattern, to be sure, but as long as the furniture was simple and upholstered in solid colors, not a bit overwhelming. The rugs come also in six other colors. M. G.

salt is needed as no deterioration can occur between the grains.

You've probably heard caviar lovers who have indulged their taste abroad, insisting how much sweeter-tasting are the borax-treated berries they get in Europe. Our Food and Drug Administration forbids entry of borax-preserved food, so all of ours is preserved with salt.

One versus the other makes a lively debate wherever gourmets gather. Some of us at HOUSE BEAUTIFUL conducted a test at the gourmet restaurant, "The Four Seasons," sampling and comparing eight lightly salted American brands with the European variety—a borax-treated tin contributed by a friend who had just brought it home from abroad. We concluded that a Russian beluga malossol (meaning lightly salted) import of Jules Weber of New York was crisper, fresher, and sweeter-tasting than the European offering.

Once opened, any caviar loses freshness fast, so it should not be held for long. Recap what's left after you open any kind of caviar, and turn it on its side every day to allow oil to seep through grains. After dipping into a tin or jar, level grains with a knife blade so there'll be no holes for oil or juice to run into and draw moisture off the other eggs. Before recapping, cover container with a layer of wax paper to further keep out air.

Fresh caviar, so special it travels at great expense under constant refrigeration or ice, deserves to have its unique taste enjoyed for itself alone. Some connoisseurs call it a crime to confuse the flavor with anything except possibly a few drops of lemon juice and toasted white bread without butter.

Some knowledgeable gourmets, like Joseph Baum, vice-president of Restaurant Associates, which owns "The Four Seasons" restaurant, also allow the use of shredded whites and yolks of eggs and finely chopped onions.

CONNOISSEURS feel as strongly about the choices of beverages to drink with caviar. Some choose champagnes, but the driest, like a Dom Perignon, 1949 vintage, or a Bollinger, 1952. If it is to be vodka, try a martini made with vodka.

Other initiates, however, favor a good Moselle, such as Berncasteler Doctor, vintage 1955 or a Schloss Johannisberger Rhine Wine, year 1953. These are the choices of Albert Stockli, the Chef Director who created our dishes.

To make these dishes, you can use natural pressed caviar, or any one of any good grade of vacuum-packed, or even one of the commonly-used caviar staples. Staples are the so-called "caviars," such as whitefish (domestic) or lumpfish (Icelandic), both of which are black, or salmon caviar, which is red.

There are lesser amounts of genuine sturgeon caviar, mildly salted, and of excellent quality, which come from Canadian and our own Great Lakes sturgeon.

WHERE our recipes call for the red, the better the color of it, the better the quality.

Don't stop with the recipes we give. Draw upon your pantry stock of caviar for dozens of other recipes you'll be able to invent yourself.

For example, make your mayonnaise for a sea food salad tastier by mixing in one ounce of red caviar, lemon juice to taste, and a stalk of finely minced scallion, blades and all.

To make a party dip, mix one cup heavy sour cream with ½ cup red caviar, juice of lemon, ¼ cup minced scallions. Heap mixture in shallow silver bowl, top with fresh black cracked pepper, and surround with thin Swedish crackers.

The blandness of mushrooms, cooked or raw, makes them a natural for stuffing with caviar, either the red or the black. Cut off the stems, scoop out the centers, and fill them with caviar, seasoned with onion juice.

Stuff artichoke hearts, either canned or frozen, and give them the richness of caviar's flavor. Cut in half, scoop out a little hollow, stuff with a mixture of caviar and cream cheese.

To stuff hard-boiled eggs, so bland-tasting, simply remove the yolks, mix them well with French dressing and red caviar, and put back in the cavities. And nothing is better than bland celery to absorb caviar's salty flavor. Stuff with a mixture of cream cheese and red caviar.

Turn prosy English muffins into gala holiday fare by toasting, buttering, and topping with a big dollop of sour cream. Then garnish with caviar—either red or black.

Here is how the gourmet restaurant, "The Forum of the Twelve Caesars," uses red caviar as a seasoning for oysters.

NEW FORMULA ELECTRASOL® RESTORES DISHWASHERS TO 100% EFFICIENCY

Eliminates FOOD PROTEIN FOAM that Reduces Dishwasher Action As Much As 90% . . . to Cause Spots, Streaks, Film.

MAKE SIMPLE EGG FOAM TEST! COMPARE YOUR PRESENT DETERGENT WITH NEW FOAM-CONTROL ELECTRASOL

OLD-STYLE DETERGENTS CAN'T CONTROL PROTEIN FOAM

Drop pinch of your dishwasher detergent into yolk-soiled egg cup. Fill with hot water. Stir vigorously. Note protein foam that can reduce dishwasher action almost to zero.

NEW FORMULA ELECTRASOL STOPS FOAM FORMATION

Drop pinch of new Electrasol into equally soiled egg cup. Note freedom from protein foam. This means 100% efficient dishwasher performance. No spots, streaks or film!

Foam Control Means Spot-Free Glasses

Economics Laboratory, leader in dishwasher detergent research, proved what scientists long suspected; that food proteins (egg yolk, milk, grease, gravy, meat, potatoes, etc.) create foam that slows down washing action almost to zero; that ordinary detergents can't control foam; that spots, streaks and film result; that new formula Electrasol eliminates foam, restores washing action to 100% efficiency. Result? Spotless glassware, dishes, silver! Get foam-control Electrasol, most economical dishwasher detergent. Enthusiastically endorsed by dishwasher manufacturers!

Sea Food Platter with Sauce Gustus

(Serves 4)

2 dozen raw oysters on half-shell
½ whole cooked lobster, sliced
2 cans crabmeat (3½ oz.)
1 doz. fresh shrimps (or one 7-oz. box frozen thawed)
1 jar red caviar (2 oz.)
1 small fresh horseradish, peeled and grated
1 lemon, divided into 4 segments

To prepare the platter, fill the four serving plates with crushed ice. Divide each of the sea foods into four portions and arrange on plates. Garnish oysters with one teaspoon red caviar on each; sprinkle fresh grated horseradish on top of caviar. If you can't get fresh horseradish, let the Sauce Gustus, which accompanies this sea food at "The Forum," and made as follows, suffice. Garnish with lemon.

Sauce Gustus

(Yields 4 cups)

¼ bunch fresh chives
¼ teaspoon each marjoram and thyme (fresh or dried)
1 cup each fresh parsley sprigs, spinach, watercress, shredded
⅓ cup shallots (peeled)
2 teaspoons dry mustard
1 clove garlic
1 egg yolk (raw)
1½ tablespoons vinegar
Juice of one lemon
½ teaspoon salt, dash of white pepper
1¼ cups mayonnaise
¾ cup sour cream

Using an electric blender, put fresh greens, one cup at a time, in container, and blend for about 6 seconds. After each addition, turn off switch, and using a wooden spoon, push greens into blades of blender. Then add shallots, mustard, garlic, egg, vinegar, lemon juice, herbs, salt, pepper. Flip on switch, and run at highest speed for half a minute. Pour in mayonnaise and sour cream, cover blender, and whirr for another half minute. Turn out, chill, and serve in small individual cups lodged in crushed ice on sea food platter. Store remaining sauce to use as a dressing for sea food salads.

You can serve this dish as an appetizer or build it up to make a main luncheon dish by adding a few more oysters and shrimps to each platter. Serve with hot croissants and sweet butter, and for a beverage use chilled champagne or a white wine.

One of the world's great vehicles for caviar is the Russian buckwheat pancake called blini. Hot, tender as a baby's ear, bland, and totally receptive to the pungent saltiness of caviar and the creaminess of sour cream, blinis are world renowned as the mate for caviar.

Because they are so world-renowned, there are many schools of thought about how the pancake should be made. The most prevalent school of thought leans to the yeast recipe that produces the light, fluffy pancake on which the crispy grains of caviar ride. The opposite point of view votes for the crispy, almost crunchy pancake which, by contrast, lets the grains of caviar seem tender and delicate.

HOUSE BEAUTIFUL will take sides about caviars, but not about the blinis. We give you here recipes for both types.

The Yeast Blinis

(à la Ambrose Heath)

Dissolve one to two ounces of yeast in a cup of tepid water, then gradually stir in six ounces of buckwheat flour, three ounces of ordinary plain flour, and a pinch of salt. Add two egg yolks, beat well, cover with a cloth, and leave to double its bulk. Now stir in three ounces of melted butter, another egg yolk, and a half pint of cooled, scalded milk. Just before frying, add two stiffly beaten egg whites. Bake the pancakes on a griddle till golden-brown on each side. Make pancakes whatever size you want. Stack them covered with a moistened cloth in a 150° F. oven, while you are getting ready to serve. Then serve them either as individual finger food for the cocktail hour or stacked four or five deep (with sour cream and caviar heaped on each pancake) as a first course or as a main course for luncheon, married to a green salad.

Crisp, Thin Blinis with Caviar

(As presented by "The Four Seasons")

(Serves 4)

1 cup milk
1 cup flour
½ cup water
5 egg yolks
1 egg
Pinch salt
3 ounces melted butter
½ pound toasted buckwheat groats (Wolff's Medium Brown Roasted Buckwheat Groats)
Peanut oil to grease skillet

Mix ingredients well. Use a blini pan (or any 5-inch, cast-iron skillet), lightly greased. Pour in a thin layer of batter, pressing batter with a spatula to make as thin as possible. Brown on one side, then brown the other side.

This recipe makes 24 blinis, which can be prepared in advance, put on a cookie sheet, and reheated in the oven just before serving.

[EDITOR'S NOTE: Aunt Jemima's Buckwheat Pancake Mix is a fast way to get a credible blini.]

To serve, spoon one generous tablespoon of caviar on top of each blini, stacking from four to six on a plate. Top each stack with heavy sour cream, and another big dollop of caviar. They can also be served like individual wafers—crisp vehicles for sour cream and caviar. Use segments of lemon. Optional, but nice, is a garnish made by mixing minced red radishes and black truffles. (Use canned, unless you can get fresh truffles.)

Jellied Consommé in Avocado Halves

(Serves 4)

Use as an appetizer or a luncheon salad one-half avocado per person, filled with jellied consommé. (Use Campbell's consommé and let it refrigerate overnight so it sets firmly.) Fill each half with jellied consommé heaping it up. Add a dollop of sour cream and top with a tablespoon of red or black caviar. Serve at once on a bed of lettuce, dressed with a tart French dressing. Garnish with lemon.

Smoked Sturgeon and Salmon Rolls Stuffed with Caviar

(As presented by "The Four Seasons")
(Serves 4)

12 slices smoked sturgeon
12 slices smoked salmon
2 jars red caviar (8 oz.)
2 jars black caviar (8 oz.)
10 small red radishes, chopped fine
4 or 5 truffles, chopped fine (½ oz. can)
1 lemon, cut in four segments

If you buy your smoked fish from a delicatessen, have it sliced thin. If you use the canned variety, get the ready-sliced Vita brand (a one-pound can has approximately 12 slices). For your salmon needs, there's also a Vita Brand ready-sliced smoked Lox salmon, 6 slices to a vacuum-packed plastic package.

Fill one of each 12 sturgeon slices with one tablespoon red caviar and each salmon slice with one tablespoon of black caviar. Roll each, fasten with toothpick, and arrange six each on serving plate. Garnish with chopped red radishes mixed with chopped truffles and lemon segments.

Where To Order Fresh Caviar

10 New Home Entertainment Centers

Today, all in one cabinet, you can have three different kinds of entertainment. And most of these consoles can be had in a variety of woods and cabinet styles

Two matching units from RCA Victor give you three-way entertainment. The phonograph on the right is a complete stereophonic machine plus AM-FM stereo radio. (Stereo radio gets AM-FM broadcasts simultaneously.) But when the television set is connected to the phonograph all the phonograph speakers are used for one stereo channel and the TV speakers for the other, to widen the source of sound. The Montgomery TV and the stereo player both measure about 31½" high and 17¼" deep. The TV is 41" wide; phonograph, 32" wide. Each unit, about $320.

Designed to be at home in many different settings, the Westinghouse consoles come in contemporary, traditional, and provincial furniture styling as well as the Early American model shown here. They include TV, complete stereophonic phonograph, and stereo AM-FM radio. The various functions can be operated by wireless remote control. The Valley Forge is 34" high, 63" wide, 19" deep, the price is about $1300.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY GEORGE SMALL

There's space in this sumptuous music center by Stromberg Carlson to include almost any new marvels of high fidelity that the future may bring. The extra storage space is now used for records and tapes. This complete console includes a stereophonic phonograph system, with both a turntable and record changer, a stereo tape recorder and a stereo AM-FM radio: 63" high, 75" wide, 24" deep. The price is about $3900.

You can look or listen to stereophonic sound with the Magnavox Stereo Theatre: It includes TV, phonograph, and radio. Record changer is above the speakers on the left side of the console, the AM-FM radio and TV controls are on the right. Sliding panels at each end open the top without disturbing the arrangement on the center section. Cabinet is 32" high, 55" wide, 17" deep. About $600, depending on your choice of cabinet finish.

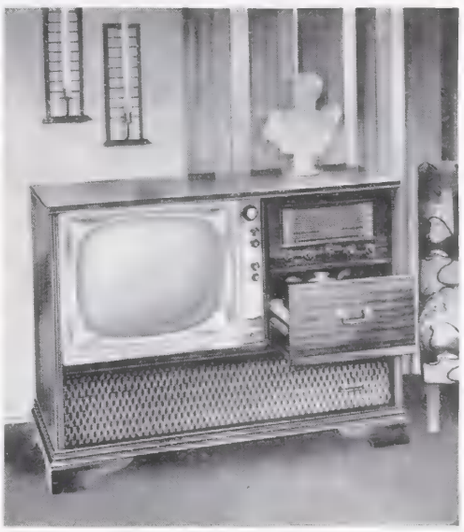
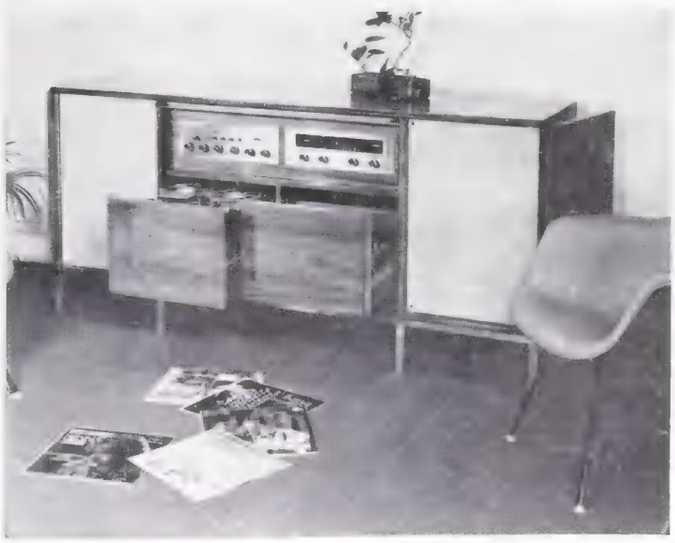
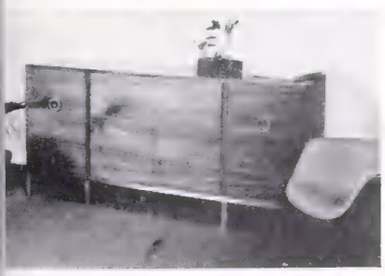
THREE PHOTOGRAPHS BY SKELTON PHOTOGRAPHY

The superb fidelity of sound from magnetic tape is the feature around which this Signature Home Music System (by Ampex) is designed. It plays and records on tape both stereophonically and monophonically at 7½ or 3¾ inches per second (i.p.s.). Recordings can be made from record, radio, or live performance. Also included is an AM-FM radio, a stereo phonograph with a choice of record changer or a turntable. All functions are channeled through the central control center. The cabinet is 33″ high, 64″ wide, 20″ deep. Price is about $2600.





You'd never know the TV is in this cabinet until you open the wide right-hand door. Controls for stereo AM-FM radio and stereo phonograph are all behind the door on the left. Note that records or radio can be played without opening the TV door. Sound comes through the grille cloth even though speaker is behind the doors. Auberry by Olympic is 33½″ high, 42″ wide, 20″ deep; about $500.



There's a choice of stereo tape transports for this console from Bell Sound. The transport can be the open-reel 4-track player or the new tape-cartridge player shown here. With this device the loaded cartridge slips into place, eliminating tape threading. It also has a stereo AM-FM radio and stereo phonograph. The Chalet is 33" high, 52" wide 19" deep. About $1130.

Where space is a problem this compact design using every inch of room may be the solution. Versatility in small space comes from multiple use of speakers. Six speakers serve for TV, stereo phonograph, and stereo AM-FM radio. There are two channels of three for stereo: all six for monophonic. Emerson Eldorado, 33" high, 43" wide, 17" deep. About $500.

If stereo recordings are your pleasure, this adaptable unit will accommodate you—the necessary microphones are included. The tape recorder plays either 2- or 4-track tapes. Both the phonograph and the AM-FM radio are stereophonic. There's also a remote control with 30-foot cord for balancing the stereo speakers from the listening position. President IV by Fisher. 33" high, 71" wide, 19" deep. About $2600.

ONE OF THE WORLD'S GREAT WINE DISTRICTS

Putting Widmer's Sherry to "weather" on the winery rooftops is a lot of work... but it's worth it!

WINE to become Widmer's New York State Sherry must spend its allotted time in tightly sealed oak barrels on the winery roofs . . . Here, thru hot summer suns and winter snows of the valley, the Sherry ages and develops its unique perfection.

Few of the world's wineries, and only Widmer's in our country, use this extensive method of maturing Sherry; which accounts for the superiority, the unchanging excellence of WIDMER'S New York State SHERRIES.

seem easier. Letting her daughter choose which four dances she wanted to go to and limiting her to two evening dresses solved much vacation-time friction in one lady's household. Taking the whole family off skiing was the way another eliminated the whole issue, but that solution is much too expensive for most of us.

Someone suggested making and freezing cookies and cakes a good long time before the holidays. Then they'd be ready for the inevitable call to supply refreshments. This and getting her three daughters' clothes organized in advance would save much last-minute anguish.

Presents: This is indeed difficult. At Christmastime we all want to give presents. First of all you will have to decide to whom you are going to give presents—all the aunts and uncles or just certain ones, all the nieces and nephews or the ones you know best, all the help, part-time and fragmentary, cleaning woman, sitters, policeman, doorman, teachers and husband's associates? Then, after to whom comes how much. Even simple remembrances all around can come to a tidy sum.

Sometimes we slip onto the treadmill with the feeble excuse that "they're only young once" and buy the much too expensive doll (because we like the hair) or the best figure skates (because we had always wanted some). And it's interesting that these splurges do not necessarily make the most treasured gifts, simply because we were really pleasing ourselves when we bought them.

One friend made a great many things which were really just remembrances—garden gloves with appliquéed fingernails and rings, gilded pine cones, and luscious fruit balls. Many of the women said they gave baskets of cookies and stuffed dates and small fruit cakes made from special recipes they had saved over the years. Attaching a little homemade verse to a simple present we all agreed gave it a particular significance. But everyone admitted that she never started in on time!

Choose your presents carefully, it really is the thought that counts. No one wants to give a gift like the one of which the little boy wrote. "Dear Aunt M. Thank you for the necktie. It's just what I wanted, but not very much."

Christmas Day: The day itself needs to be planned or it can become a mad scramble of opening presents, a late dinner, and a terrible mess to clean up in the end. Some families celebrate a quiet time of opening presents the day or the evening before with the grandparents. Some open presents all during the day and have a big celebrating feast together at sup-pertime. Others have the traditional dinner at noon and leave the afternoon to enjoy the gifts. There is no right way. What works out best for each family is the only measure.

Certainly, now that Christmas is upon us, I realize anew that our midsummer colloquy did not cover all the aspects of Christmas, nor did we come to any sure solutions to everybody's problems. But we did stir up our thinking. And we did conclude that planning ahead, using the summer for gift-making and list-making, and even cooking ahead could relieve that awful eleventh-hour panic and confusion.

Now each of us will have to carry out the Mid-Year's Resolution against her own family background. Christmas can be different. The singing reality of Joy to the World and peace are still there to be sought and found. You still have time—"just twenty more days . . ."

plant's family affiliation, and then, its photograph. There is also a section with specific instructions on how to grow and care for every plant shown. The book is a matchless means of plant identification, and a treasure trove of useful information about growing plants indoors. Outdoor gardeners in tropical and sub-tropical climates can also use it to good advantage.

It is printed on stock chosen to stand up under the heavy use of the florists, horticulturists, and home enthusiasts to whom Exotica will be indispensable. The price is $25. If you can't get it at your local bookstore, it can be ordered direct from Julius Roehrs Co., Book Department, Rutherford, New Jersey. As a gift to an indoor gardener—or an outdoor gardener in a tropical climate—it would be most appreciatively received.

The other book is a treasure of a very different kind. Called The Gardener's World, it is a delightful collection of varied literary efforts on the subject of plants and gardens through the ages. Here, Editor Joseph Wood Krutch has put such unexpected contributors as Colette, Boccaccio, and Samuel Johnson, side by side with such established nature-lovers as Linnaeus, Thoreau, L. H. Bailey, and Donald Culross Peattie. This rich texture and change of viewpoint is one of the book's major joys.

In point of time, some of the stories are from the 1st Century B.C., some from recent times. Together they serve to remind us that the thoughtful man of today is little different from thoughtful men of any age.

Mr. Krutch was immodest enough to include one of his own pieces in the book, and we may be thankful for it. His story of the dependent partnership of the Yucca and the Yucca moth stands between an excerpt from Darwin's Origin of Species and an essay by Samuel Butler. That his work is not out of place in this company will come as no surprise to those who know of his attainments. For those who don't, Mr. Krutch has written 21 books, edited seven, and has established himself as a naturalist, scholar, and teacher.

A word must be said for the superb good looks of this book. Designed by Marshall Lee, it is at once elegant and homey, and has the subtle quality of looking just exactly as such a book should. There are 44 pages of illustration in fascinating variety, but all related to gardens.

It includes 476 pages, is published by Putnam, and costs $7.95 now, but will cost $8.95 after January first. To our knowledge there's no other book quite like it.

A-framed beams span this room, endowing it with a sense of bigness with sheltered security. Narrow skylight at ridge eliminates a look of heaviness and further accentuates the full height of the triangle. Side-lighting from fully glazed gable end and dormer-like side bays floods interior with well-balanced light.

Masonry walls are made of desert concrete, a method in which big boulders are used as rubble. Carefully placed against the forms when concrete is poured, they give a softly colorful over-all texture to final surface. Technique does not require highly skilled labor.

World leaders choose fine California Sherries

People in close touch with international affairs tell us that world leaders, faced with a decision, choose smooth, chilled California Sherry as a cocktail or "on the rocks." This is only natural, for the Sherries of California are among the most abundant and varied of all the sherries in the world. Gentle sunshine, the world's finest grapes, and the centuries of the vintner's patient skill combine in California to produce such wonderful Sherries as these:

Sherry . . . . . tangy, nut-like, medium-sweet
Cocktail Sherry . . . . . lighter and drier
Pale Dry Sherry . . . . also very dry
Flor Sherry . . . . . tantalizing flavor
Cream Sherry . . . . . smooth and nut-sweet

How much can you ask of a small house?

• The answer is "Plenty!"

The actual interior floor area in this house is 900 square feet yet the interior has an air of soaring spaciousness that gives a lift to daily living. The designer used one of the simplest and most inexpensive forms of construction, timber A-framing, to achieve this result and at the same time enclose the space most economically. Built seven years ago, it cost $14,000.

By making the most of the special grandeur of the sweeping roof lines he created an atmosphere of vivid interest with a feeling of dignity and bigness far beyond the actual dimensions of the plan.

Open planning has become recognized as a valuable means of relieving a small house of the sense of crowded confinement. By opening rooms into each other as much as possible they all benefit from the size of the total space.

This house goes farther to gain this air of freedom within shelter by introducing openness upward with a continuous skylight at the ridge. This opening, where enclosure would be most expected, like a release of pressure, fills the house with cheerful lightness in its tree-shaded site. It is an ideal solution for northern or sea-coast locations where sunlight and heat are not a problem and fog and clouds are prevalent.

Inexpensive materials can be used to produce glamorous results, as this house shows. The basic materials used in the building are concrete, fir, and redwood boards.

Structural patterns produce a decorative interplay of forms that enrich the interior. Partitions are faced with horizontal redwood boards. As a special feature, iron discs are built into a masonry pier to be used as planters.

Compact kitchen, neat as a ship's galley, has same redwood walls as rest of house. Consistency of materials throughout, rather than abrupt changes from room to room, gives continuity and sense of bigness to the whole house.

Antigua more than lived up to the sketchy description I'd had of it. First of all, its climate is unbeatable—and I can say that with authority. Hot, dry air cooled by refreshing trade breezes, and no rain except in late fall and December. And then the rain is merely tropical showers with no long stretches of dreary wet weeks one encounters during "rainy" seasons in so many places.

After the all-important advantage of climate, the Island's "talking points" are its lovely rolling countryside, lush in some parts and bucolic in others, and the attractive lot of people who have built cottages or who visit there and belong to the colony.

YOU'RE very aware of Antigua's British background as you drive over to Shirley Heights and look down on historic English Harbour, one of the loveliest and best protected in the world, and the strategic spot where Lord Nelson adroitly hid his fleet.

But in this British atmosphere you actually find yourself in the midst of an American colony. With the smart Mill Reef Club as its center, this Yankee domain on a British Isle occupies about 1,400 acres and includes roughly six miles of coastline, most of it beautiful beaches. They're really perfection and compare favorably with those of Bermuda. With fine, pinkish sand they slope gently into the emerald green and sapphire-blue translucent waters. The sea around Antigua is a joy to those who have gone mad about learning more of underwater life and who love to rig themselves up in weird-looking contrivances for the sport with the ugly name of snorkling.

The life of the sybaritic Americans centers around the Mill Reef Club, organized and designed by architect Robinson (Happy) Ward, who before casting his eye on Antigua had lived and built houses in Bermuda. His wife, Dorothy, is a decorator, so they make an effective team. I believe all but two of the forty villas that dot the club property were designed by Hap, and many were decorated wholly or partly by the team's distaff side.

All the houses are planned to take advantage of the ideal and dependable climate. In many cases walls are eliminated and terraces become living rooms. The very few fireplaces are used more as a decorative feature than for practical purposes in this mild atmosphere.

One of the most interesting and artistic houses is the Wards' own place. Paneling, paintings, textiles, and statues imported from Bali have been used to great advantage in this New World setting which oddly enough is completely appropriate to the Balinese style of decoration.

The Kenneth Iveses have another show place which they frequently lease for the winter, a house that seems to have been built especially for parties, judging from the entertaining that went on when the Severance Millikins had the house.

The Brook Spencers live in probably the highest point on the Island, in a house planned to take advantage of the east exposure in the morning, with the bar and dining quarters on the western side where the sunsets compete with the daiquiris as stimulation.

MY PET house is the one where I stayed. It belongs to Mrs. Walter Allen of Hartford who is called (though she will probably shoot me for saying so) the "Queen of Antigua." Leslie Allen is undoubtedly the most popular person on the Island—not just with the American colony but with the British, natives, and in all sorts of milieux. Her little house, called Le Fancy (Fancy is an old-time word much used through the West Indies), is a ten-minute beach walk from the club and is often referred to as Grand Central Station because of the constant stream of visitors who come in for a chat, a bit of advice, or a dip from Leslie's lovely curving beach. Mrs. Allen, having been a pupil for years with Dione Lucas in New York, is a real gourmet and has taught her majestic native cook many dishes that would do justice to the Cordon Bleu. People love to be invited to dine at Le Fancy even though the fare at the Club is above average for country-club cuisine.

The Mill Reef steward uses great imagination in planning his meals. On Saturday nights when almost 100 sit down to dine—the best steel band in the West Indies plays at the Club Wednesday and Saturday—dinner doesn't begin with the ubiquitous vichyssoise or madrilène. Instead you're served something out of the ordinary. For instance one night we had hot crêpes rolled around curried chicken hash. Another evening, small hot cheese croquettes, such as you get in Brussels, were the appetizer.

A GIFT OF

Chartreuse

16 ✝ 05

Chartreuse liqueur is one of the most elegant gifts you can select for a friend on your list who has a taste for good living. This rare liqueur has a colorful history dating back to 1605. Today, its secret recipe is known only by a handful of Carthusian Monks who produce it in Voiron near a secluded French monastery. Chartreuse is delicious served straight, on the rocks or over ice cream or fruit.

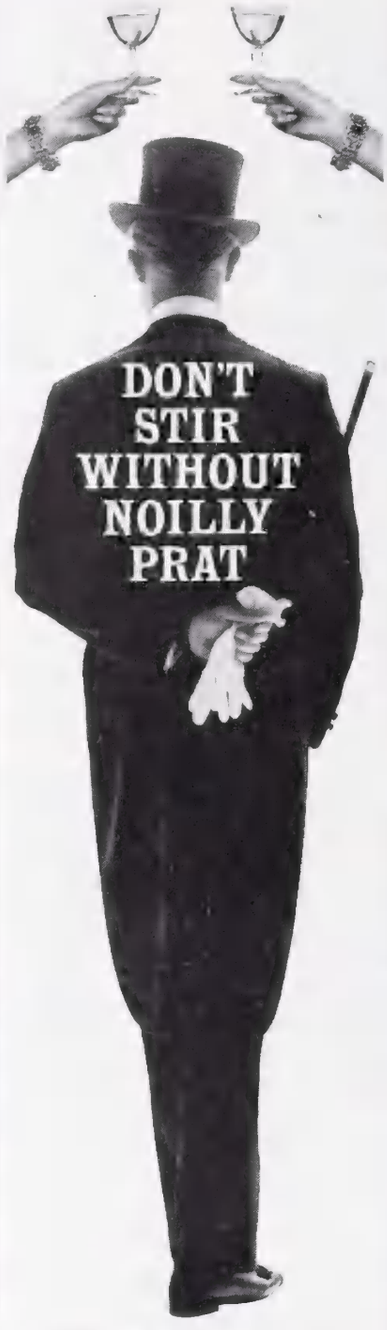
From December 15 through April 15 season rates here are about $46 a day, double.

You may think you're going to lead a lazy, dolce far niente life in Antigua. But once you're introduced to a club member or put up for two weeks, you have to be of strong will to avoid the rash of invitations. Parties are mostly informal and at luncheons or cocktail gatherings anything goes in the way of garb. For dinner women do "dress" and men, if they don't wear a white dinner jacket at least forego shorts for slacks, wear a linen coat and a loud tie with a comfortably collared shirt.

What do you do besides sunbathe and swizzle? There's a very sporty nine-hole golf course, rather rolling and tricky. One hole especially boasts a "cardiac hill," not popular with the elderly, however. English type of croquet is played a great deal and there's fishing, yachting, and tennis, besides the usual card games and Scrabble, which the Antiguans seem mad about. There are lots of picnics on Antigua. At 10 o'clock every morning when people arrive at the Club for their mail and to shop at the commissary, the lobby is full of attractive wicker picnic baskets and Thermos bottles with gay sketches on them, full of coffee or the Club's famous rum punch. They are lined up for the groups who will claim their ticketed paraphernalia and drive off to some secluded and lush picnic spot. After hours of sun bathing and swimming, lunch is served under the palms, followed by siestas or Canasta or Scrabble.

YACHTING is popular, with races scheduled regularly. Trips to nearby isles such as Guadelupe, St. Kitts, and Monserrat are part of the Antigua routine, most of the parties hiring boats from the popular Captain Nicholson, well known in most American yacht clubs. It's a treat to visit Captain and Mrs. Nicholson in their apartment at English Harbour—especially if you drop in at 4:30 when the Captain goes to his radio board to check in with his various ships to relay telegrams and messages to the skippers and passengers.

Antigua's capital, St. John's, isn't as colorful or as attractive as many West Indies' towns but it has a certain charm which grows on you after a few visits. Tuesday is the day to go into St. John's, 18 miles from Mill Reef. This is market day when inviting fruits, fish, and vegetables are displayed to be taken back by housekeeping cottagers. During the morning nearly everyone stops at the attractive little shop operated by Mrs. Ogden Starr, daughter of the Hap Wards, and Mrs. Ward's son, Amos Morrill. It's called the Coco Shop and it's stocked with unusual and smart clothes styled to suit life on Antigua. Many of them are designed by the shop's owners and made by local seamstresses. The shop has a charming, cool patio where tired marketers gossip and exchange invitations before going across the street to a quaint Victorian hotel, Kensington House.



ON AN OLD-fashioned porch or gallery, as they'd say in New Orleans, there's a bar and informal tropical garden. In this relaxing setting you have a gin and tonic or "a Kensington Special," a rum drink (every place seems to have its own pet way of dealing with rum) before returning to the Club or your cottage for lunch.

This little hotel is sometimes used by people who are meeting or departing on early planes or boats. Also by those who are asked into town to some gay doings and don't want to risk driving home on the winding narrow roads. The rates at the Kensington are unusually low—$18 for room, bath and three meals. What's more, that means "Bee-Wee dollars" which, in case you're not familiar with British West Indies currency, is only about $11 American. One dollar "Bee-Wee" is worth 59 cents.

You'll probably come into St. John's for a cricket match, as the local team is a crack one and plays with cricketers from Trinidad, Barbados, and even from far-away Pakistan. Another reason for going into town might be an invitation to one of the Scottish gatherings. There are lots of Scots in Antigua and they love to foregather to play the pipes, twirl a hornpipe or, late in the evening, grow weepy over sentimental Highland songs.

The natives in Antigua are an unusually amiable and sweet-smiling lot. They are extremely polite —a maid always addresses her employer as Master or Mistress. To those of us used to stateside service they seem like angels.

Good thing one can afford so many servants because, strange to say, Antigua has no telephones. There's a phone in the Mill Reef Club, at the Airport, and various hotels, but those who live in cottages go phoneless. It's hard to get accustomed to this lack although the Islanders don't seem to mind. In fact they're a bit smug about it and delight in sending off notes and invitations by their "house boys" and in leaving messages at the clubhouse. The telephone building in St. John's is a sight to see but one impossible to describe, what with the mass of wires pouring in and out of a window in the Exchange Building.

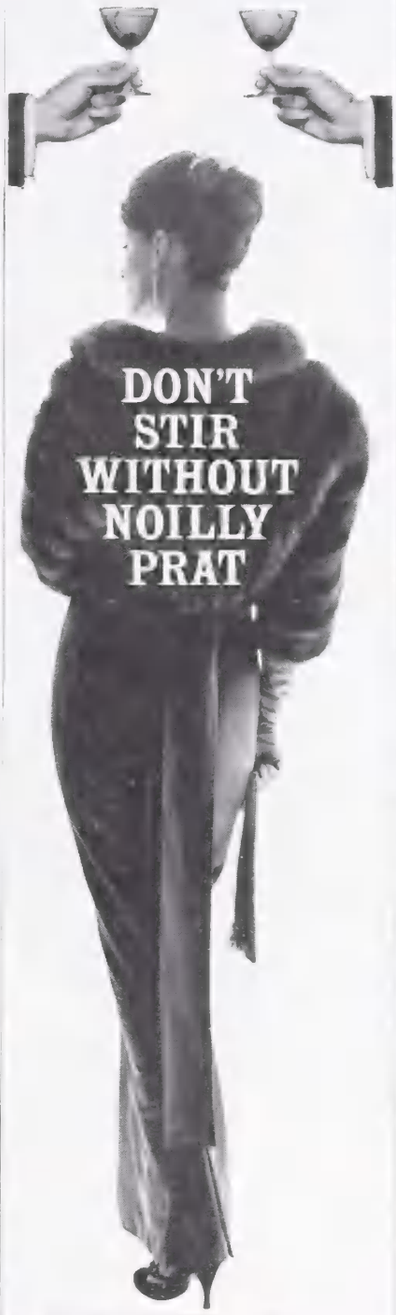
In case you have the impression that a holiday on Antigua is dependent on a membership in, or a card to the Mill Reef Club, there are four other hotels where you can be very comfortable and, after all, you get the same wonderful air, sun, and sea. (The little Kensington in town is not a place to stay except for a night or two.)

Antigua's latest hotel which opened last year is unique and charming. Called The Anchorage, it is only about five miles from St. John's, making it the most accessible of the Island's beach hotels. The Anchorage is owned and operated by a young Scotsman, Ronald Paton, and his wife. Having lived in South Africa for some time, they had the idea of using Zulu style of architecture for their buildings. All bedrooms are in what look like Zulu huts—pale blue concrete walls and cone-shaped roofs of black. Each hut contains two bedrooms, two baths, a kitchenette, and a small terrace. Some have a living room.

The Anchorage is directly on the sea—probably closer to the water than any of Antigua's hotels. In typical tropical fashion the large bar, lounge, and dining rooms have very few walls, thus taking full advantage of the delightful trade winds. Cuisine is outstanding and the Patons wisely use local produce such as snapper, lobster, and tropical fruits as much as possible in their menus.

PEOPLE come from all over the Island for the bar's famous specialty, an Anchorage punch. The barman mixes local rum, lime juice, and a bit of cane sugar syrup and lets the mixture stand for several days in the refrigerator. Just before serving he adds some bitters and sprinkles nutmeg over the top. One usually does the trick —two and you're feeling no pain.

Even in its short existence The Anchorage is full up during the winter months but the Patons swear that summer is just as comfortable and they have special attractive rates for the (so far) off-season period. Season rates run about $32 to $44 a day, double.



The Half Moon Hotel is two years old. Next door to the Club, it was designed and decorated by the Wards. At present it can accommodate only 50 people but they're planning to add new wings as needed. The Half Moon boasts the only swimming pool on the island —but I'll never know why anyone would choose a pool when Antigua's lovely beaches are so inviting. The Half Moon will have a nine-hole golf course soon for those who do not use the Club's links. Double room in season is about $42.

ON THE opposite side of the Island from Mill Reef and half way between the Airport and St. John's is a modern hotel called White Sands, perched on a slope and commanding a magnificent view of the sea. On the beach, practically hanging over the water, is a "play house" with a large bar, dance floor, juke box, and a huge terrace. Stretched along the beach is a row of cottages which are serviced by the hotel. They'd be lovely places to stay in, with the sea only a few yards from your door! So peaceful is it that Mill Reef members have been known to go over to White Sands when invitations come in too thick and fast and they long for a few days interim of no parties. Season rates here are from $28 to $32, double.

At the Antigua Beach Hotel double rooms are from $22 to $32.

Antigua is far enough away to keep crowds from ruining it. The extra hours you have in the air are rewarding. Particularly as to climate. One way to reach Antigua from New York is to fly to Puerto Rico via Pan American or Eastern, breaking your trip at San Juan, and then taking an "island hopper" plane of British West Indies Airways (branch of BOAC). The islands are so close together and so lovely from the air, that landings and take-offs aren't as tiresome as they usually are.

Pan American also flies from New York to Antigua every Sunday, Tuesday, and Thursday night, stopping en route at San Juan and St. Croix. Plane leaves at 10:15 P.M., arriving at Antigua at 8:55 A.M. next morning. Antigua time is one hour earlier than New York time, so the trip takes about 10 hours—just about right in my book to discourage the trippers who have to get where they're going in a hurry, carrying with them the hectic bustle they think they're leaving behind. For, with all its activity, Antigua is for those who want a place to relax, for lovers of sunshine and long siestas!

NEW SWEET! You'll love this new arrival from France! Noilly Prat Sweet Vermouth is somewhat less sweet than most sweet vermouths. It makes a wonderful difference in Manhattans. Enjoy it solo, too. It's delicious on-the-rocks!

Patterns for paper fruits: Each square in this diagram represents one square inch. You can either draw your own grid or use regular graph paper (rule it off with heavy lines at one-inch intervals). Then, working in only one square at a time, draw exactly what is shown in our diagram, keeping the relation of your lines to the side lines of the square the same as in the diagram here. By this method, you will find you can make the patterns without difficulty.

around, put to work their craftwise skills learned in the classroom. Christmas will mean more to all of you when you create it with your own hands.

The fruits you make can be either quite literal, or fancifully conceived. The round ones, such as oranges, apples, pomegranates, breadfruit, and melons, are made of Styrofoam balls. The bananas, watermelon sections, and pineapples, for which we give patterns in the diagram above, are constructions made of pasted paper, painted as exotically as you wish. The foliage, which you can get from your florist, consists of sheafs of dry wheat heads and magnolia leaves (or rhododendron or any other waxy-type) treated with glycerine for bronzy color and longer-lastingness. For the artificial grapes, use clusters from the dime store.

Materials needed for making fruits for a five-foot tree: about 49 Styrofoam balls (if you make a tree as big as our 5-footer): six 5″, twelve 4″, twelve 3″, nineteen 2″; 4 or 5 sheets of heavy drawing paper, inexpensive water-color paper or detail paper (not cardboard) about 36″ x 24″, obtainable at art supply stores; masking or package-wrapping tape; 1 smallest-size can water-based wall paint (we used Kemtone's Provincial Gold); tubes of concentrated water-color paint or jars of tempera (ours were red, blue, yellow, and brown, used for pigment variety, but you can use colors more to your liking); 9 grape clusters; one bunch of dried wheat heads; 150 fresh green magnolia, rhododendron, or other large green leaves; one-half pint of glycerine.

DIRECTIONS

It takes the green foliage a long time to soak up the glycerine, so start these first in order to have them ready by the time the fruits are. (For treating your leaves and for making the tree frame, turn to page 208.)

How to Make the Round Fruits

These are made from Styrofoam balls of 2″, 3″, 4″, and 5″ in diameter. Some are used whole, others are cut in half, still others have quarter sections cut out (leaving the remaining ¾ sections to be used). Make some of each and use them all separately.

Use a saw (not a knife) to cut the Styrofoam balls.

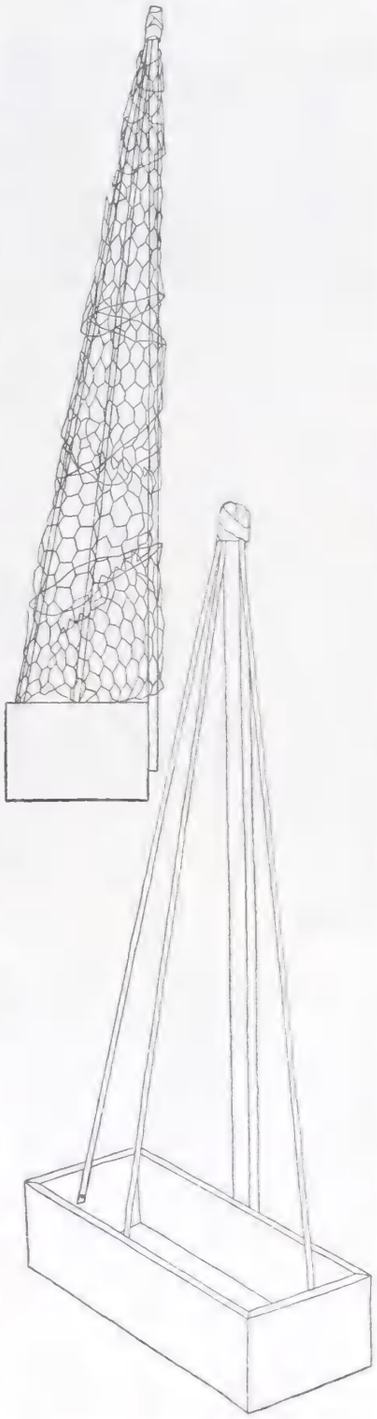
of paper to produce a smooth surface for painting. Coat these with manageable strips of paper napkins or paper toweling soaked in Sobo, Elmer's, or any other white glue that has been diluted half-and-half with water. Apply these soaked strips criss-cross over the Styrofoam balls just as you would wind yarn around a ball. After you coat balls, let dry.

For the flat sides of the cut fruit, make circles of shelf or wrapping paper the same diameter as the ball and paste in place.

How to Make Paper Fruits

To cut bananas, watermelon sections, and pineapples, which are constructed of tough, flexible paper (see list of materials, page 204), use the patterns given in the diagram on page 204. Make full-size patterns in light-weight paper as guides in cutting sections from final heavy paper.



Bananas: (See diagram, page 204.) Each banana consists of one front section and two curved sides. To join sides, coat each edge with contact cement by running brush at right angles to the butt edge of paper. Let dry and apply another coat before joining. If properly coated, dried, and recoated, the parts will now adhere edge to edge with no lapping. Join sides to front section, first, then close back. Be sure to begin at one end, with pieces to be joined properly matched, for no adjusting should be done after cemented edges have come together. A ¼″ wide sliver of masking tape may be wrapped around each end to reinforce it.

Make 6 or 7 bananas for each cluster. Cut a simple fan-shaped piece of paper to hold the bunch together. Cement bananas at one end in a group to the fan-shaped paper, pasted underneath to give the bunch a little spread. Our tree had two clusters.

Watermelon sections: Diagram shows ¼ of entire fruit section and ½ of corresponding rind section. Cut one whole fruit section and one whole rind section. To assemble, fold piece for fruit section in half, the long way. Attach rind section, curving to fit, and pasting together all edges, as for bananas. Reinforce the joins with masking tape to give added stability.

Pineapples: Pattern is for ½ of one side of pineapple. Cut three whole sides and one triangular base. Also cut 24 small points and one spur for each side of pineapple. Leaves, for which no patterns are given, are long single blades, varying in length from 4″ to 11″ and about ¾″ to 1½″ in widest part, depending on length. The shorter ones are curved slightly. Each leaf is scored with a blunt point of knife or scissors for creasing slightly down center as real leaves are creased. For each pineapple, you will need three tall, four middle-size, and five small leaves.

Using contact cement, coat the three sides of the fruit, and let dry. Now coat just a band ½″ wide across the bottom of each point, let dry, then re-coat when ready to put in place. Beginning at top, place points in over-lapping rows on sides of pineapple, trimming if need be, so none sticks beyond the fruit edges.

Now, working flat on the table, attach the base of the three sides to the triangular base with masking tape or paper tape. Next, fold up on these joints and paste three sides, as you did with the bananas. Make a cluster of leaves, tallest in center, tape tightly together, and insert in top of pineapple, attaching with tape.

Last, attach three spurs as a collar to cover joining of leaves. Bend the points and spurs outward with your fingers to give the proper spiny look. We made 2 pineapples.

Painting Your Fruits

You can be as literal or as imaginative as you want.

We started with a can of gold-colored paint as a good base color. We varied it with green, yellow, red, brown, and white water-colors (or tempera colors) to achieve a great variation in the green, orange, and brown range. Mix only small amounts of each shade at a time.

Paint directly on the smaller Styrofoam balls to simulate oranges, lemons, or limes. Paint pomegranates, apples, and other larger fruits only after you've coated them with paper (See page 208).

Paint each fruit a basic color first, let dry; then use various pigments for adding stripes, dots, dashes, seeds, or what-have-you. When you paint over tape, touch your brush to soap to make paint stick.

How to Make Glycerined Leaves

To make bronze leaves, start with magnolia, rhododendron, or any broad waxy leaves. Cut off stems of all leaves so that only 2 inches or so remain. Slit short stem several times with sharp knife for easier absorption, and place just the stem ends in a solution of ⅓ glycerine, ⅔ water.

In a few days the solution will begin to climb through the leaves, burnishing color to a nice bronze shade. The heavier and bigger the leaves, the longer the treatment will take. It may be anywhere from 4 days to two weeks before they are ready. When entirely colored, the leaves are glycerined and will last indefinitely.

If you want only a temporary effect for your fruit tree, you can, of course, use fresh leaves.

How to Make Tree Base and Frame

Start with a small wooden box or tub of a size to hold the tree you're planning to make. For ours, 5 feet tall, we used a container about 8 inches high, 20 inches wide, 12 inches deep.

Using rough lath or light lumber, nail a vertical spine, as tall as the tree is to be, to the back edge of the tub or box. Now attach three more supporting laths (or wires) as shown in the drawing on page 207. Tape, nail, or wire all four supports together at the top to form a tepee-like structure that will fit flat against a wall like a half-tree.

Using odds and ends of chicken wire, screen, or even plain wire, wrap the form roughly to provide a network for wiring fruit to the tree. Lightly stuff the cavity of the frame with crushed newspaper and spray with any dark green, brown, or black paint you happen to have. This will keep light from showing through your tree after fruit is attached, giving it a look of solidity. The box could be sprayed or stained at the same time.

Assembling

Using ordinary household wire from the dime store, wire each fruit individually to frame. For small round fruit, the easiest way to attach is to make a hole straight through ball with ice pick or skewer and run a single wire through it. Secure wire at outer end with a tiny tuft of paper to keep it from pulling through the fruit and attach other end to frame. With other fruits just poke wire through a corner, wherever convenient.

Begin at the bottom of the frame with watermelon segments, and work up the tree, generally placing larger fruit near the bottom and smaller ones as you proceed upward. Fill spaces between fruit with leaves, wired individually or in pairs, and with dry wheat stalks.

BRING THE WASSAIL BOWL UP TO DATE

The wassail brew should be limited to short gatherings. For long-drinking sessions, hot, heady drinks could be counted on to wreck the Christmas spirit and the human head and stomach!

To serve it properly, bedeck the bowl with holly or other Christmas greens, and set out with hot ale (cider, apple juice, or ginger ale, according to tastes and creeds), the spices and the nutmeg for the host to mix. The apples and lemons should be toasting over the fire to be added at the last moment. The brew, when mixed, should be kept warm on the hearth. When it loses its warmth, have handy a hot poker getting red hot to thrust into the bowl, smoking and sizzling in a lovely fiery ritual.

Should you have no hearth, a silver-plated, copper or brass bowl kept warm over an alcohol burner, candle warmer, or an electric heating device will work equally well. A crockery mixing bowl or marmite from the kitchen will work as well as a silver bowl. So will a pitcher used to bring the heated brew in from the kitchen to the serving bowl on the table, provided the same spirit and spirits are used. Most important ingredients—much laughter, song, and good cheer.

Food served with the wassail cup should be on the mild or sharp side to offset spicy sweetness. In this realm of suitable flavors are champagne biscuits, plain zwieback, cheese sticks, caraway seed sticks, pumpkin seeds, salted almonds, thinly sliced Russian pumpernickle, spread with sweet butter and sprinkled with grated Sago cheese. Also a happy snack choice to serve with these hot wines is herb bread, thinly sliced and warmed with sweet butter. When hot wines are not made too spicy, they seem to have an affinity with raisins and dried apricots, crab apples, and pears. Hot tidbits that go well with wassail drinks are small Quiche Lorraines (see recipes, page 164), hot Swiss cheese in ramekins and Virginia ham slices inserted in squares of hot corn bread.

Ye Olde Wassail

(or "One Yard of Flannel.")

1 quart ale
3 eggs
1 quart rum or brandy
4 tablespoons castor sugar
Peel of 1 lemon
Nutmeg
Powdered ginger

Heat the ale almost to boiling point. Stir in some grated nutmeg, a little powdered ginger (about ½ teaspoon), and lemon peel. Beat eggs with sugar, adding a little water to thin. Pour the hot ale into warm jug containing beaten egg and sugar. In another warm jug, put the brandy. Pour the mixture from the one into the other until it is as smooth as flannel (or lamb's wool). Have wassail bowl preheated. Serve piping hot.

The Farmer's Bishop

(Most popular for an open-house when you expect many to come and go. Serves 48.)

12 oranges (with 8 whole cloves stuck in each)
2 quarts apple brandy
4 tablespoons sugar
4 quarts cider
1 teaspoon each cinnamon, nutmeg, cloves

Bake spiced oranges whole in slow oven for an hour. Place them in heated bowl, pricking well with fork. Pour slightly heated brandy over them. Sprinkle with sugar. Set fire to brandy and let burn a minute or two. Extinguish flame by pouring over it the almost boiling cider, reserving ½ cup cider. Into this, stir spices, and add cider to mixture in preheated bowl. Keep warm, serve very hot.

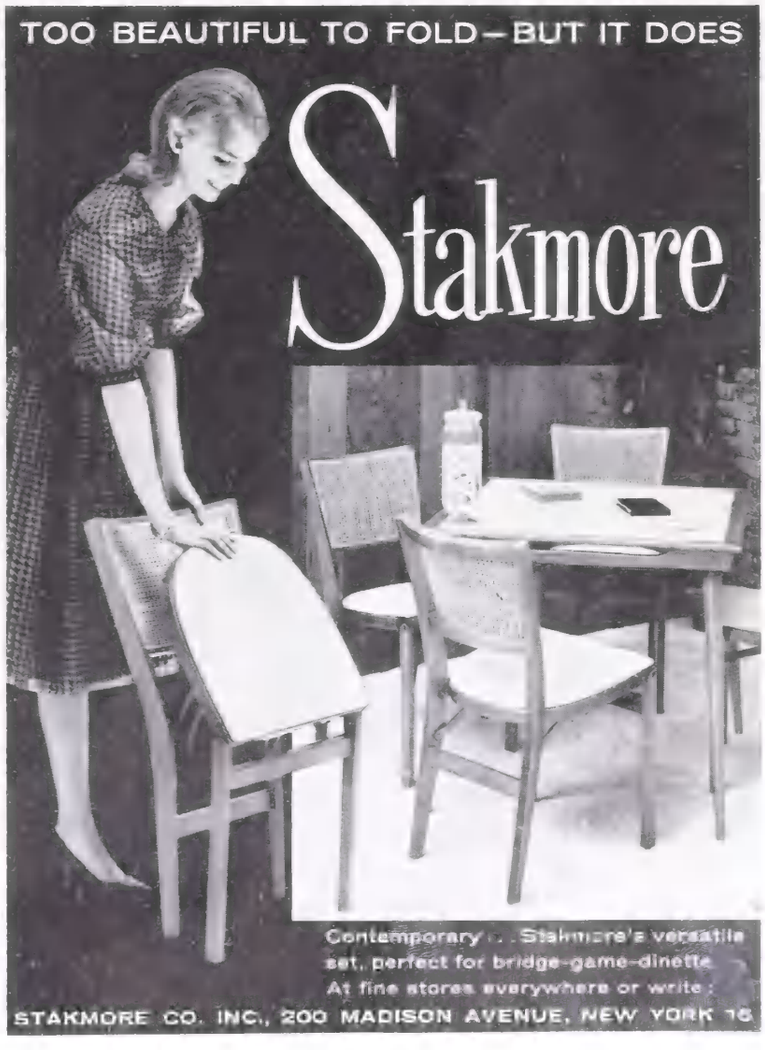
Hot Purl

4 cups mild ale or fresh cider
2 tablespoons sugar
½ tumbler of whiskey
3 teaspoons grated nutmeg
2 eggs

Heat the ale and nutmeg in a saucepan till it barely reaches the boiling point. Remove from fire. Beat the eggs with the sugar and a little cold ale. Add to the hot ale slowly, stirring briskly all the while to prevent curdling. Add whiskey. Heat again, serve very hot.

Mulled Ale

Heat together 1 quart good ale and 1 glass of apple brandy. Add 1 tablespoon castor sugar, ¼ teaspoon ground cloves, ¼ teaspoon grated nutmeg, pinch of ground ginger. Serve piping hot in mugs.



Plain Cider Bowl

(For a milder brew, here is one for 50 guests.)

12 quarts good, sweet cider
6 sticks cinnamon
4 teaspoons whole cloves
1 teaspoon ground nutmeg
1½ cups sugar
6 small unpeeled, roasted apples

Mix all ingredients but apples. Bring to boil. Put in serving bowl. Add apples whole, serve very hot.

● Start the new half century by learning a new skill in 1960. Self-realization and self-development will be the big keys to the new decade. You can enrich the quality of your surroundings with practical, usable beauty, created by your own hands.

● For the first time, a magazine takes handcrafts out of the category of the esoteric, discusses them in their proper context, as part of daily life, and reveals them as rewarding skills which you as an amateur can develop.

● The January HOUSE BEAUTIFUL suggests 12 skills worth your investigating—some old, some new. It shows you how to develop and apply them—cooking a perfect omelet, making a screen of plastic imbedments, creative stitchery, sand-cast sculpture, tapestry-weaving, or mosaic work.

● It guides you in the selection of the best available materials to work with, tells you exactly where to get them so that your projects will have intrinsic importance worthy of your efforts.

● Don't miss this issue. It's a major statement on what handcrafts can mean in your life. It can be your springboard to great and exciting experiences in creative achievement.

It's another one of those issues of House Beautiful that you'll treasure forever!

The master bedroom, an almost completely enclosed alcove on the balcony level, is a serene, restful retreat. Free of clutter, it gains its inviting quiet atmosphere from uncluttered elegant form.

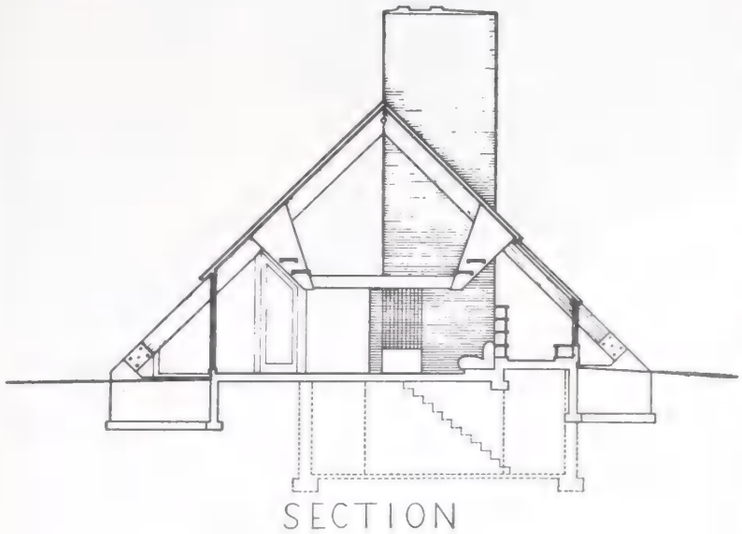
daily life to significant experience. The fir beams that form the basic structure rise right from the ground to the high ridge, establishing a repeated pattern of dominant upward movement that dramatizes the full height of the interior.

The second floor, a balcony suspended from the beams through the center of the house, forms a low ceiling over a portion of the main floor, adding, by contrast, to the effect of extreme height in the main structure.

The A-frame is one of the most economical methods of construction since it eliminates all the usual joints and connections between roof and walls. For a northern climate it is especially suitable for heavy snow loads.

In this house, nestled among pines, the form has been put to good use to bring in light from above. Glazing between the sloping beams lets sunlight into the rooms dappling the floor just as it filters through the trees in the surrounding woods. Where a large part of the year must be spent indoors, such a sense of snug protection yet spacious freedom is a great boon. This spaciousness inside is not due to big dimensions. It is entirely the result of form and proportions.

Music and color have powers that are more easily recognized and more consciously absorbed. But the structural forms we live in exert a steady ever-present influence on our states of mind and emotion. A room or a whole building can affect the life within it subtly and profoundly.

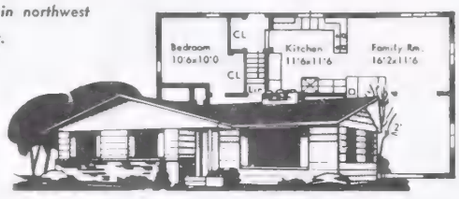


Unreasonable and inappropriate structure can produce a disturbing environment. Sensible engineering without aesthetic concern for human emotional reactions will at best result only in a blank, like total silence, that does nothing for us except to instill a vague sense of unfulfillment.

When structure and atmosphere are considered as one inseparable whole, as in this house, the result is a building that makes a powerful contribution to the desired degree of repose or excitement, seclusion or exposure, dignity or frivolity.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Stairs to balcony level maintain simple decorated timber construction used consistently. By avoiding the confusion of many different materials this small house maintains dignity. Straightforward handling of timber and brick brings structural forms into clear prominence with a success no collection of small ideas and exotic building materials could match.



SECTION

Vertical section through living room shows A-shaped beam framing anchored on exposed exterior footings. Second floor, suspended in the center of the interior, is hung from the main beams with triangular plywood gussets. Railings between gusset plates are horizontal boards, like open shelving, to keep the relationship between floors as light and open as possible.

American terms and materials. They are: a cassoulet from Alsace, a roulade from Germany, two Quiche Lorraine recipes (one from Switzerland and one from Alsace), a Flemish carbonnade recipe, a recipe for knockwurst with tomato and sauerkraut from Germany, a stewed chicken with a corn meal crust, which is partly Italian, and Beckenoffe from Germany.

All make excellent main course dishes if surrounded with one hot vegetable, a green salad, crusty French or Italian bread, and followed by a sweet of your own choosing.

Cassoulet

(For 8 persons)

1½ qts. white beans
1½ onions, minced
4 carrots
2 celery stalks
2 lbs. smoked ham
1 lb. uncooked bacon
½ lb. salt pork
1 garlic sausage
2 lbs. shoulder of pork
2 lbs. breast of lamb
½ duckling, boned and cubed
2 cloves garlic
½ lb. lard
Fresh bread crumbs
2 fresh tomatoes
2½ cups veal stock

Cook beans with carrots, celery, garlic, and salt pork. Cube pork shoulder and lamb and brown together. Then simmer with 2½ cups veal stock and diced tomatoes for about 1½ hours. Cube the duckling. Mix the cooked beans with the pork shoulder, duckling, and lamb. Slice salt pork. Heat sausage, then slice. Combine all ingredients, place in casserole, and cover with fresh bread crumbs. Bake 20 minutes at 375° F. to 400° F. (Note: Use fresh thyme or fresh basil for flavoring, if possible.)

Beckenoffe

(For 8 persons)

1 lb. (or 13 ozs.) shoulder of pork (boneless)
1 lb. (or 13 ozs.) shoulder of lamb
Cube into 1-inch pieces.

1½ lbs. fine sliced onions
2 lbs. fine sliced potatoes
30 ounces chablis
Bouquet of:
6 or 7 cloves
3 bay leaves
20 pepper corns
1 pinch rosemary

HELP US KEEP THE THINGS WORTH KEEPING

It's good to be a boy, exploring the wide world, soaking up wonderful new sounds and sights everywhere you go. And if the world's a peaceful place, it's good to grow up, too, and become a man.

But will the world stay peaceful? That depends on whether we can keep the peace. Peace costs money.

Money for strength to keep the peace. Money for science and education to help make peace lasting. And money saved by individuals to help keep our economy strong.

Brown meat in pan—fast flame—drain grease.

Into large casserole, place layers of (2 each) potato, meat, onion—potato, meat, onion.

Pour over this 2 tablespoons of wine. Place bouquet in middle, cover. Place in oven 500° F. for 2 hours until meat is tender.

La Carbonade

(For 8 persons)

2 lbs. onions
½ lb. butter
16 slices pounded top round steak
2 tablespoons flour
1 clove garlic
½ teaspoon fresh thyme
1 bottle beer
Salt
½ cup beef stock
1 teaspoon cracked pepper
1 teaspoon Dijon mustard

Slice onion very fine and sauté until golden brown. Dip beef slices in flour and separately brown gently on both sides. Dice garlic and sprinkle thyme over carbonade. Add beer and ½ cup beef stock, 1 teaspoon Dijon mustard, salt, and pepper. Simmer for 1½ hours.

Blend one tablespoon of soft butter and 1 tablespoon of flour and thicken the carbonade as you would for stew. Serve with generous amount of chopped chives.

Quiche à la Suisse

(For 8 persons)

Beat 6 eggs with 16 ounces cream. Add ½ lb. grated Gruyère cheese and 1 teaspoon salt.

In 4 ounces butter, sauté until golden brown the following:

2 large onions, sliced very thin
¼ lb. bacon, fried crisp
2 leeks, sliced very thin
1 teaspoon chopped chives
1 teaspoon fresh marjoram
1 teaspoon chopped parsley

Combine with egg mixture. Line pie tin with pie dough. Pour in mixture and bake 375° to 400° F. until golden brown on top (about 25 to 35 minutes).

A milder Quiche Lorraine from Alsace
(à la Morrison Wood)

Unbaked pie crust shell
White of 1 egg
½ lb. grated Gruyère cheese
1 tablespoon flour
6 slices bacon
1 cup minced onion
3 or 4 eggs
1 to 2 cups of rich milk or cream
Salt
Dash cayenne pepper

Make your favorite rich pie crust shell (9 inches), and brush the entire surface with white of egg after the shell is in the pie tin. This prevents any sogginess in the crust.

Dredge the grated Gruyère (or imported Switzerland) cheese in the flour, mixing well. Fry the bacon slices in a skillet until nicely crisp. Drain them on paper toweling, and cut in tiny pieces.

In the bacon fat sauté the minced onion until limp, then distribute the onion and the bacon pieces over the bottom of the unbaked pie shell. Cover the onion and bacon pieces with the mixture of grated cheese and flour.

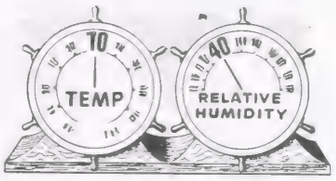
Beat 3 eggs with 1 cup of rich milk (or 4 eggs with 2 cups of rich milk for a deeper tart), salt to taste, and add the dash of cayenne pepper. Pour this custard over the cheese.

Bake in oven (400° F.) for 10 minutes, then reduce the temperature to 350° F., and bake for 1 hour, or until a knife comes out clean from the custard. This recipe will serve 6 generously, or 8 scantily.

Roulade
(For 8 persons)

16 slices top round (5 ozs. each)
For each slice:
¼ dill pickle
3 slices onion
¼ green pepper
Twig of fresh dill
¼ teaspoon mustard with ¼ teaspoon mustard seed

Roll this mixture in each meat slice and fasten with toothpick.



Dip in flour and brown all over. Place in saucepan and simmer with 8 ounces of red wine

2 cups beef gravy
1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil
¼ teaspoon cracked pepper
Salt to taste

Cook, covered, for 1½ hours until tender.

If your home is HOT WATER HEATED...

You can now enjoy the health and comfort benefits of wintertime air conditioning

Regardless of what your past experience may indicate, you can now have healthful, comfortable wintertime humidity in your hot water heated home. Yes, you can have the "other half" of wintertime air conditioning.

BENEFITS of Controlled Humidity

Properly maintained relative humidity increases your personal comfort and improves your resistance to colds and other respiratory ailments. You're less troubled with dry nose, throat and lips. You don't feel chilly even with the thermostat set two or three degrees lower.

In addition, furniture glue joints hold up better. Rugs and carpets last longer, and house plants don't dry out quickly.

HOW TO HAVE CONTROLLED HUMIDITY WITH HOT WATER HEAT

To achieve properly controlled relative humidity in a hot water heated home, you need a humidifier designed for that kind of home. It must have big capacity to do the job right. It must be fully automatic and controlled.

One humidifier meets all these requirements—the Armstrong Humid-i-maker. It was designed for hot water heated homes, evaporates 16 pints of water per hour when circulating water temperature is 180 degrees F. A humidistat calls for humidity as needed just as your thermostat calls for heat.

Investigate the Humid-i-maker, today. See your plumbing and heating contractor or write for illustrated bulletin.

Stewed Chicken With Corn Meal Crust
(For 8 persons)

Four 2½-lb. chickens, each cut in eighths. Dip in milk and flour mixed with salt, pepper and 1 tablespoon paprika. Sauté until golden brown.

Vegetable Sauce

In another pan, sauté 3 green peppers and 2 onions, diced, with 1 tablespoon chopped fresh basil (or 1 teaspoon dried basil). Stew together with 8 ounces white wine and 1 cup beef gravy.

Place chicken on bottom of casserole and pour vegetable sauce over the chicken.

Separately, cook 1½ cups of maize (yellow corn meal) in 1 quart of milk, for 20 minutes. Remove from heat and add 1 cup of grated Gruyère (or Vermont sharp cheese) with 4 ounces of butter.

Roll maize on cooky sheet. Then place maize spread on top of casserole (like a pie crust) and bake for 15 minutes.

Knockwurst With Tomato Sauerkraut
(For 8 persons)

8 knockwurst
3 lbs. sauerkraut
3 ounces butter
1 onion, minced
2 lbs. salt pork
8 ounces white wine
8 ounces tomato juice
1 tablespoon tomato paste
4 green apples, peeled and diced
1 tablespoon caraway

Simmer onion golden brown in 3 ounces butter. Add sauerkraut, apples, wine, tomato juice, and purée. Place salt pork on top and cook for 2 hours. Add caraway. Then place knockwurst on kraut and cook for 10 minutes.

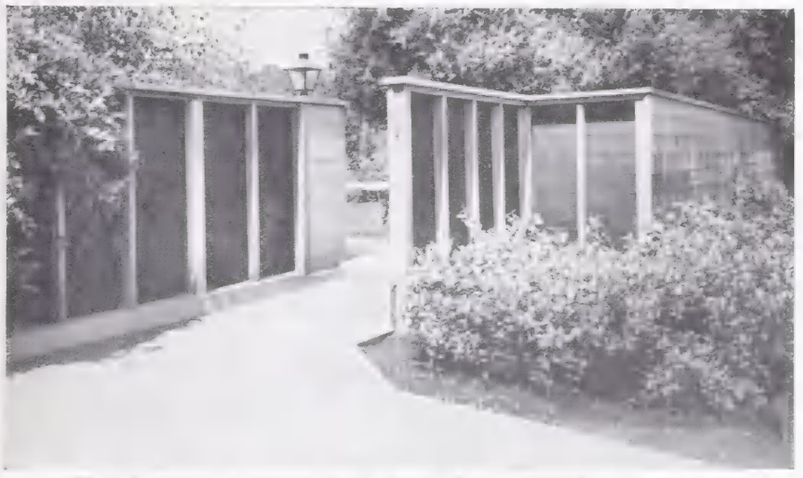
About 20 guest cars can park here, and any one of them can leave without disturbing the others. There are three distinct parking areas, but they are so screened and divided with plants and fencing that you aren't reminded of a public parking lot.

PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

The raised step between parking area and entrance garden is an example of the thoughtful detail wrought by Landscape Architect Thomas Church. In easy view of the entry drive, this is the obvious (and right) place to park. The curb is a wheel stop and it lines the cars up neatly. Layout of paving and planting in the entry garden helps direct guests to the front door.

DRAWING BY MADELAINE THATCHER



Hospitality starts with good parking space

A guest becomes a guest as soon as he enters your driveway. The welcome of a good host should extend to meet him there

By CARROLL CALKINS

● The direct relationship between parking space for guests and the number of place settings one has, or the size of a living room, seems obvious enough. But how often this is overlooked! People who wouldn't think of inviting more guests to dinner than they could serve in comfort will invite more cars than can be properly parked and never give it a second thought. This impoliteness, when recognized as such, is usually excused as necessity.

Planning and design will provide the needed space for parking. Here, at the Leland Kaisers, for example, the motor court and parking areas were designed as an integral part of the site, the plan and shape of the house, and the pattern of daily life. There's plenty of parking for the size parties they prefer. There's a place close to the pool for the cars of friends who are invited for a swim. There's easy turn-around space for service trucks. And the whole property is designed for beauty and usefulness, with an eye toward reducing maintenance.

This fence was moved back from the street-side property line to make space for extra parking. This area is outside the front garden and you never see the cars from the inside. Baffle arrangement of the fence directs guests to entry walk, avoids a gate yet screens the house from the street. Set-back and planting beautifies street.

From inside the entry garden you aren't aware of the street just a few feet the other side of this fence. Ground covers are used to avoid the problem of maintaining a lawn under a large tree, and the fence serves as a show place for favorite vines. A fence-top light fixture illuminates both the parking space and entry walk.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER

The jaunty stone rooster stands on a pedestal at the foot of a garden stairway making an interesting terminal point. Finding animal forms in the garden scene is never a shock since they occur in nature anyway, so the eye and mind need make no big adjustment. Landscape architects: Innocenti and Webel.

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY CARROLL CALKINS

Stones are the sculptor's raw material, and are used in this planting as if they were actually pieces of sculpture. Because they are placed so their shape and texture are seen to the best advantage, they become an important part of the landscape scheme. Landscape designer: Edwin T. Wyatt.

Almost hidden in the leafy shadows, this sculptured figure by Adeline Kent is in perfect balance with its surroundings. When you see it you enjoy it. But you can also see and enjoy the pool, stone wall, pole fence and an intriguing variety of plants. Landscape architect, Thomas Church.

Use Sculpture Casually

Sculpture need not dominate a garden scene to be effective.

When blended with the background,

there's the joy of discovery when you see it

TWO PHOTOGRAPHS BY MAYNARD PARKER

Abstract shape set casually in a clump of festuca like an egg in a nest. Such small pieces can be moved from place to place. Part of their charm is how their character changes with the setting.

Placing this antique sculpture before a strong masonry background keeps it from being overly important. If it were too noticeable it would distract from the garden it was to enhance.

Herbs are for wintertime and all the time

In all their pungent variety herbs are the spice and necessity of culinary life

By WILLIAM ALVADORE BUCK

■ However great the distinction herbs may lend to your garden and table, they are essentially weeds.

Men have found herbs so satisfactory that we have paid little heed to improving them, and this is all to the good. They still possess their wild sturdiness and will grow quite well without the solicitude of the gardener.

Hence, except for chives and parsley, I will not have a great deal to say about their individual culture. They usually prosper best with at least six hours of sun a day, good drainage (all but a couple are native to dry lands), and fair soil. A few, marjoram, rosemary, summer savory, tarragon, and thyme, thrive on short rations.

Basil belongs to the mint family, along with catnip, clary, horehound, hyssop, lavender, marjoram, pennyroyal, peppermint, rosemary, sage, spearmint, savory, and thyme. A tropical, basil should not be planted until danger of frost is past and the locusts bloom, though it may be started indoors. The plants grow two feet tall, and should stand eight inches apart.

Borage is a rank-growing annual, two or three feet tall, with white or brilliant blue flowers. It will self-sow. Thin to fifteen inches.

Chives, it is odd to remember, were hardly known twenty years ago. Now, surely everyone is aware that they are little hardy perennial onions with tops we use for onion flavor. In a few weeks you can buy them in little pots. This is the best way to start chives, for they are cheap, and growing them from seed is slow. They grow outdoors in the warmer months and retire in the winter, but will grow in winter in a sunny window.

Outdoors set the clumps eight inches apart. Every third year or thereabouts they should be divided. Like all onions, they thrive on full sun, rich soil, and lots of water. Keep the tops clipped, so that new tender spears are coming on all the time, but do not cut down the entire top unless it becomes shabby with a mat of dead stems. It will grow a foot tall or more.

Dill, another member of the parsley family, is seldom employed today, as it once was, "to hinder witches of their will," but you might find it worth trying. It is a leggy and leaning annual, three feet tall, which is best planted in clumps, so that one stem will help support the others. Clumps may be ten to fifteen inches apart.

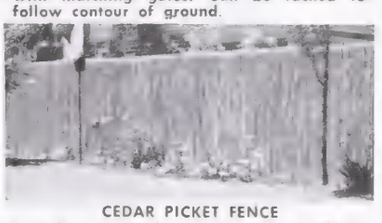
Fennel or finocchio is a five-foot European perennial which we commonly plant as an annual in the fall or early spring. The heavy, yellow flower heads need to be supported, perhaps against a fence. Let the plants stand eighteen inches apart. It sometimes escapes into the wild and becomes a pesky weed in pastures, for it gives a bad taste to the milk of cows that eat it. Florence fennel grows a bulb-like business about the roots, which people devour, cooked or raw.

Sweet marjoram is a tender perennial, which in our climate is seeded as an annual, early in the spring. It grows only a foot tall and has small white flowers. The plants should stand six inches apart in the garden. For preserving, pick leaves twice a season.

Mint is a hardy perennial and one of the most indomitable alive. In sun or part shade, give it an inch and it will take the yard, choking out most competition, unless you get rough with it. Put a sprig in water on a sunny window sill and it will root almost before a small child gets impatient to see the white rootlets.

Mint may also be raised with ease from underground stolons. It grows two or three feet tall and the book says to start the plants a foot apart; they soon flop around and root all over the place. The tiny flowers are generally purple.

Oregano or pot marjoram, the spirit and heart of some fine Mexican and Italian dishes, is a perennial, though sometimes it will winter kill in the higher latitudes, where it must be treated as an annual. It attains 20 inches in height and blossoms in pink. Start it by means of seed, layering, or division, and space the plants a foot apart. The seed is very small and so it might be most convenient to start it in a seed pan. It will cut two crops a year for keeping. After August stop cutting it.



Parsley nearly everyone grows, and I have never heard of a failure. It thrives in almost any soil, needs six hours of full sun a day and prospers on moderate fertility. The only difficulty about raising it is the usual difficulty with herbs—waiting for it to come up. You give up finally, just before it appears. Plants should stand six inches apart in the row after thinning; rows may be fifteen inches apart.

HERBS ARE FOR WINTERTIME

Seed may be started indoors most any time; the young seedlings transplant readily, though older plants, because of their long tap roots, need deep pots and expert handling.

Pick no more than two or three leaves from each plant at a time, leaving the others to support growth, and it will produce until the deep winter freeze.

Rosemary is a shrubby plant, six feet tall, and in April and May it blossoms with little light blue flowers that hang in clusters. The leaves are white and woolly underneath and dark and shiny on top. It may winter kill if it does not have good protection; some bring it indoors for the winter, either as a greenhouse plant or stored dormant in a cool cellar.

Sage of herb gardens, Salvia officinalis, is related closely to that S. splendens, the error of our fathers, the bedding scarlet sin of flowers, that once made every lawn look like a country railroad station. Sage is a perennial and will live for five or six years, even in cold climates, if given winter protection. It grows two feet tall and may spread to three feet in diameter, so give it room. It is most often planted by cuttings, layering, or division, for a plant grown from seed will not mature the first year.

Savory is a spindly annual, twelve to eighteen inches tall, which does not transplant well and so must be seeded where it will grow in the garden. If the plants are grouped together each supports the others and they look better. They develop buds and are ready to cut for keeping twice a season.

Tarragon, may grow two feet tall. Cuttings or divisions should be placed twelve inches apart. The little flowers are yellow. It is a perennial but needs protection from wind and winter where the mercury goes below zero. In cutting always leave some foliage.

Thyme, the shrubby garden herb, Thymus vulgaris, is still a pretty tough brother. A rocky situation or a rock mulch suits thyme just dandy. It is a perennial, grows a foot tall, has little whitish leaves and tiny lavender flowers. It will grow easily from seed, cuttings, or divisions, but a seedling will not grow large enough for harvesting the first year. Divide the plants every third year to prevent them from getting woody. Stop cutting after Labor Day.

How to have and hold

Grandma's way of preserving herbs out of season was not the best. The best, for those you can grow in pots, is to keep them fresh in a sunny window. Rosemary, thyme, sage, marjoram, parsley, chives, basil, and savory all can endure the rigors of indoor life.

It is good practice to freeze the leaf herbs, some of them, at any rate. The matter has not yet been too widely explored. Freezing seems to preserve the color and the essential oils, which carry the flavor, better than grandma's drying method. For freezing or drying, herbs should be cut in the morning, after the dew has evaporated. Take half to two-thirds of the plant. Wash off the garden dust. To protect the leaves from dehydration when freezing, seal them, without blanching, in plastic bags. When you use them thaw the leaves in cold water, or else chop them fine while they are still frozen.

Leaf herbs can be dried satisfactorily in a warm, airy place indoors, either on screen racks or tied in bunches and hung free. They should not be dried in contact with paper or cardboard, nor exposed for more than a couple of minutes to the sun or oven heat. When the leaves have become crumbly dry, strip from stems, store in airtight glass or plastic.

The seed herbs had best be bunched and dried in paper bags. Cut the heads when the most mature seeds can be pulled easily from the plant. Paper bags are a good protection for drying leaf herbs as well as seed herbs, if the drying room is dusty. Make sure the bunch hangs free in the bag.

Well, perhaps as an herb-cooking fancier you are like I was a few years ago. I thought I did not care much for herb cooking and boasted that I valued the natural tastes best. My wife, a fine cook, blamed this on herself—occasionally, when her spirit was calm. She says now that, as a wholesaler's daughter, naturally she acted on this principal: if one pinch was good, two must be better. She has learned since that this is not true in herb cooking, for herbs, properly used, can add virtue to the natural flavor of food. As with most things, she has convinced me, too.

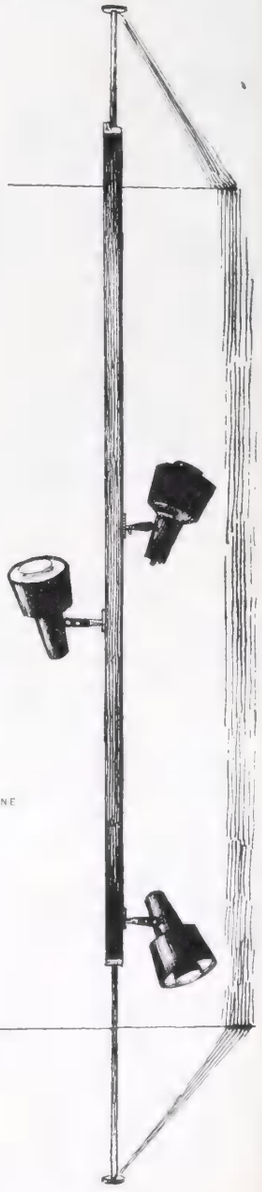
Lampholders for spotlight or floodlight bulbs come with a variety of stands, clamps, and swivel bases: 1. Wire stand with lock nut, Steber Utilite, $2. 2. Hand clamp on weatherproof socket, Stonco, $2.65. 3. Swivel base with retractable clamp, Swivelier, $4. 4. Outdoor lampholder (can be used indoors without spike), Moe, $4. 5. Bolt-clamp type for flat or round surfaces, Swivelier, $4. All of these take projector bulbs (labeled PAR and need no weather protection) or reflector bulbs (labeled R and need weather protection). Both types come either as floodlights or spotlights, in six colors and a variety of wattages.



Lensholder (top) converts ordinary spot or flood bulb to color. With one of four colored lenses, $1.65. Baffle louver (bottom) directs light, cuts down glare from bulb, $1.25. Both, Steber.
